James McHenry's Failure—Count Andrassy's Intentions.

Austria's New Policy in the East—The Quebec Riots.

GREAT BRITAIN.

JAMES M'HENRY'S FAILURE.

London, Aug. 16.—A receiver has been appointed for the estate of James McHenry. The assets, £1,000,000, consist of shares and leasehold and freehold property. It is possible that the judgment of the master of the rolls requiring McHenry to deposit installments in the court of the sum recovered by the Erie Railway Company in its recent action against him, has been the means of bringing matters to a climax.

FINANCIAL.

The Economist says scarcely anything is being taken from the Bank of England for the United States. For instance, Friday the remittance was chiefly sums received from the continent. It is understood that the gold bought for New York yesterday was in completion of an order for £250,000.

FAILURE.

Glasgow, Aug. 16.—Joseph Adams, iron merchant and broker, has failed; liabilities heavy.

PARLIAMENT PROROGUED.

London, Aug. 15.—Parliament was prorogued to-day. The speech from the throne was delivered by a royal commission.

BIG FAILURE.

New York, Aug. 15.—A London dispatch says that James McHenry has failed, with liabilities at $970,000.

CANADA.

FIRST DISPATCH.

Quebec, Aug 15.—The ship laborer's society of Strocks, 2,000 strong, marched through the lower town today intending to proceed to the coves. As they entered Champion, the stronghold of the laborer's society from which the Strocks seceded, a battle was begun. It was ended by Strocks men falling back to the lower town. Several men were wounded by pistol shots and others badly beaten. One man is reported dead.

SECOND DISPATCH.

Quebec, Aug. 15.—The ship laborers' trouble culminated to-day in a fearful free fight in the lower town in Champlain street, near Allan Rees & Co.'s wharf No. 5. A section of the society seceded, considering they were not properly heated and formed an independent party composed almost entirely of French Canadians. This morning they walked in procession through the streets to show their strength, but when on their way to the cove were set upon by a large body of the parent society. There were about 3,000 men on the French Canadian side and not so many on the other side, which was composed principally of Irish Catholics. Shots and blows were freely exchanged to the great injury of a great number in the crowd. The French Canadians were finally driven back, having lost according to report, five killed and several wounded. The mayor did not allow the police to interfere, as he has but 40 men.

THIRD DISPATCH.

Another fight was reported raging at the cove, and some police and magistrates have gone there.

AUSTRIA.

NO DANGER.

Vienna, Aug. 16.—The commission appointed to inquire into the danger at Wulachka from subterranean disturbances, declare there is no fear of an immediate catastrophe.

ANDRASSY.

It is said Count Andrassy greatly regrets the emperor's acceptance of his resignation as he really wished to remain in office.

GERMANY.

UNIFORM PATENT LAWS.

Berlin, Aug. 16.—It has been proposed to hold an international congress in May, 1880, to elaborate a uniform patent law for adoption by the nations represented in the congress.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

FIRE.

St. Johns, N. B., Aug. 16.—Fires in St. Perrie Migeulon last night, destroyed the new government buildings, a dozen stores, and as many private houses.

Meteorological.

Washington, Aug. 16.—Indications: For lower lake region, heavy rains followed by partly cloudy weather and northeasterly to westerly winds; no decided change in temperature and during the night rising barometer. For the Ohio valley, areas of rain, with partly cloudy weather, northerly to westerly winds, slight rise in barometer and slight changes in temperature followed by falling barometer.

CRIME AND CASUALTY.

WONDERFUL ESCAPE.

Cleveland, Aug. 16.—It has developed that the five persons reported drowned near Rocky River yesterday, were not drowned, but landed on a small beach and escaped without serious injury. From the fact that their boat went to pieces and no trace of them could be found by the tugs or life boats, it was supposed they were lost.

FIRE.

St. Louis, Aug. 16.—The losses by fire last night are not fully made up yet, but that on the elevator will probably be about $15,000 and about the same on grain, a large part of which was corn. Hazard & Wilson's loss on the ice house is about $7,000. Insurance on elevator, $35,000, as follows: $2,500 each in New York City, Northern of New York, Equitable of Nashville, Girard of Philadelphia, Washington of Boston, Firemen's of Boston, National of New York, Neptune of Boston, Bowery of New York, Elliott of Boston, Revere of Boston, Clinton of New York; $1,250 each in Manufacturer's and Boylestone of Boston, Star and Hoffman of New York. There was no insurance on ice houses.

The fire reported last night to have occurred at Lebanon, Ills., was at Lebanon, Mo. The loss is now estimated at $60,000.

Detroit, Aug. 15.—Shortly before midnight last night a fire broke out in a barn on Michigan avenue, near the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad crossing, beyond the city limits. There being no water, the supply pipes of the water works not extending that far, the progress of the flames could not be stayed, and were communicated to and destroyed all buildings in the vicinity, ten in number, including three brick stores and five frame dwelling houses. Total loss, $30,000; insurance, $14,000.

A TERRIBLE MURDER.

Boston, Aug. 15.—Joseph F. Frye aged about forty, dealer in hides and leather, was found murdered this forenoon, at his residence, at No. 13 Jay street. The letter carrier seeing the door ajar opened it and found Frye lying in front of his open safe with a bullet through his head. The safe had been robbed of its contents. Frye was last seen at his place of business at about 5 o'clock last night. His family are away, but are expected home tomorrow.

ANOTHER BODY FOUND.

Detroit, Aug. 15.—The body of Anna Flushing, another victim of the steamer Stomhoff disaster, was found floating in the river this afternoon.

Saratoga Races.

Saratoga, Aug. 15.—The three-quarter mile dash opened to-day', races, and it was won by Checkmates Egypt second, and Jennie B. third. Time, 1:16¼.

Voltuno won the mile and a quarter dash, Governor Hampton 2nd, Mary Ann 3d; time 2:10¼.

MISPLACED CONFIDENCE.

John Krieglo, of Napoleon, the Last Victim.

His Wife "Runs Away With a Handsomer Man."

An individual named John Kreigle, from Napoleon, O., is the latest victim of misplaced confidence. The confidence which in this case struck the wrong box was placed in a lady from Muncie named Carrie Bair, who about a year and a half ago became Mrs. John Kreigle. John anticipated nothing but unalloyed happiness and domestic felicity, and only found out how badly fooled he was, last Saturday night, when he went home and found Mrs. K. and the junior Kreigle, aged about fifteen months, or to say he didn't find them. They were gone, so to speak, "done goned and runned away" with a handsomer man, Joseph Kattrick by name and a brick mason by trade. They have been married but about eighteen months, and the baby is fifteen months old, which shows how long and deeply he has loved his erring wife. They knew no trouble, and the blow sets on John like an eighty horsepower Worthington engine. John, however, seems to be more sensitive respecting the loss of the baby than Mrs. John, and who wouldn't be? after making such strenuous efforts to get an heir without any unnecessary loss of time. The only thing that Mr. Kreigle knows about the matter is that his spouse and the bricklaying Kattrick left Napoleon last Saturday night on the Wabash train, and he supposes that they came to this city. All his efforts to find the guilty pair so far have been unsuccessful. All he objects to is that Kattrick, who pretended to be his friend, should act that way, and steal his whole family without giving him any preliminary warning.

Since writing the above, Mr. Kreigler has discovered that his wife has gone to Muncie, and he has obtained a situation in this city and will remain.

James McHenry's Failure--Count Andrassy's Intentions.

Austria's New Policy in the East--The Quebec Riots.

GREAT BRITAIN.

JAMES M'HENRY'S FAILURE.

London, Aug. 16.—A receiver has been appointed for the estate of James McHenry. The assets, £1,000,000, consist of shares and leasehold and freehold property. It is possible that the judgment of the master of the rolls requiring McHenry to deposit installments in the court of the sum recovered by the Erie Railway Company in its recent action against him, has been the means of bringing matters to a climax.

FINANCIAL.

The Economist says scarcely anything is being taken from the Bank of England for the United States. For instance, Friday the remittance was chiefly sums received from the continent. It is understood that the gold bought for New York yesterday was in completion of an order for £250,000.

FAILURE.

Glasgow, Aug. 16.—Joseph Adams, iron merchant and broker, has failed; liabilities heavy.

PARLIAMENT PROROGUED.

London, Aug. 15.—Parliament was prorogued to-day. The speech from the throne was delivered by a royal commission.

BIG FAILURE.

New York, Aug. 15.—A London dispatch says that James McHenry has failed, with liabilities at $970,000.

CANADA.

FIRST DISPATCH.

Quebec, Aug 15.—The ship laborer's society of Strocks, 2,000 strong, marched through the lower town today intending to proceed to the coves. As they entered Champion, the stronghold of the laborer's society from which the Strocks seceded, a battle was begun. It was ended by Strocks men falling back to the lower town. Several men were wounded by pistol shots and others badly beaten. One man is reported dead.

SECOND DISPATCH.

Quebec, Aug. 15.—The ship laborers' trouble culminated to-day in a fearful free fight in the lower town in Champlain street, near Allan Roes & Co.'s wharf No. 5. A section of the society seceded, considering they were not properly heated and formed an independent party composed almost entirely of French Canadians. This morning they walked in procession through the streets to show their strength, but when on their way to the cove were set upon by a large body of the parent society. There were about 3,000 men on the French Canadian side and not so many on the other side, which was composed principally of Irish Catholics. Shots and blows were freely exchanged to the great injury of a great number in the crowd. The French Canadians were finally driven back, having lost according to report, five killed and several wounded. The mayor did not allow the police to interfere, as he has but 40 men.

THIRD DISPATCH.

Another fight was reported raging at the cove, and some police and magistrates have gone there.

AUSTRIA.

NO DANGER.

Vienna, Aug. 16.—The commission appointed to inquire into the danger at Wulachka from subterranean disturbances, declare there is no fear of an immediate catastrophe.

ANDRASSY.

It is said Count Andrassy greatly regrets the emperor's acceptance of his resignation as he really wished to remain in office,

GERMANY.

UNIFORM PATENT LAWS.

Berlin, Aug. 16.—It has been proposed to hold an international congress in May, 1880, to elaborate a uniform patent law for adoption by the nations represented in the congress.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

FIRE.

St. Johns, N. B., Aug. 16.—Fires in St. Perrie Migeulon last night, destroyed the new government buildings, a dozen stores, and as many private houses.

Meteorological.

Washington, Aug. 16.—Indications: For lower lake region, heavy rains followed by partly cloudy weather and northeasterly to westerly winds; no decided change in temperature and during the night rising barometer. For the Ohio valley, areas of rain, with partly cloudy weather, northerly to westerly winds, slight rise in barometer and slight changes in temperature followed by falling barometer.

CRIME AND CASUALTY.

WONDERFUL ESCAPE.

Cleveland, Aug. 16.—It has developed that the five persons reported drowned near Rocky River yesterday, were not drowned, but landed on a small beach and escaped without serious injury. From the fact that their boat went to pieces and no trace of them could be found by the tugs or life boats, it was supposed they were lost.

FIRE.

St. Louis, Aug. 16.—The losses by fire last night are not fully made up yet, but that on the elevator will probably be about $15,000 and about the same on grain, a large part of which was corn. Hazard & Wilson's loss on the ice house is about $7,000. Insurance on elevator, $35,000, as follows: $2,500 each in New York City, Northern of New York, Equitable of Nashville, Girard of Philadelphia, Washington of Boston, Firemen's of Boston, National of New York, Neptune of Boston, Bowery of New York, Elliott of Boston, Revere of Boston, Clinton of New York; $1,250 each in Manufacturer's and Boylestone of Boston, Star and Hoffman of New York. There was no insurance on ice houses.

The fire reported last night to have occurred at Lebanon, Ills., was at Lebanon, Mo. The loss is now estimated at $60,000.

Detroit, Aug. 15.—Shortly before midnight last night a fire broke out in a barn on Michigan avenue, near the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad crossing, beyond the city limits. There being no water, the supply pipes of the water works not extending that far, the progress of the flames could not be stayed, and were communicated to and destroyed all buildings in the vicinity, ten in number, including three brick stores and five frame dwelling houses. Total loss, $30,000; insurance, $14,000.

A TERRIBLE MURDER.

Boston, Aug. 15.—Joseph F. Frye aged about forty, dealer in hides and leather, was found murdered this forenoon, at his residence, at No. 13 Jay street. The letter carrier seeing the door ajar opened it and found Frye lying in front of his open safe with a bullet through his head. The safe had been robbed of its contents. Frye was last seen at his place of business at about 5 o'clock last night. His family are are away, but are expected home tomorrow.

ANOTHER BODY FOUND.

Detroit, Aug. 15.—The body of Anna Flushing, another victim of the steamer Stemhoff disaster, was found floating in the river this afternoon.

MISPLACED CONFIDENCE.

John Kriegle, of Napoleon, the Last Victim.

His Wife "Runs Away With a Handsomer Man."

An individual named John Kreigle, from Napoleon, O., is the latest victim of misplaced confidence. The confidence which in this case struck the wrong box was placed in a lady from Muncie named Carrie Bair, who about a year and a half ago became Mrs. John Kreigle. John anticipated nothing but unalloyed happiness and domestic felicity, and only found out how badly fooled he was, last Saturday night, when he went home and found Mrs. K. and the junior Kreigle, aged about fifteen months, or to say he didn't find them. They were gone, so to speak, "done goned and runned away" with a handsomer man, Joseph Kattrick by name and a brick mason by trade. They have been married but about eighteen months, and the baby is fifteen months old, which shows how long and deeply he has loved his erring wife. They knew no trouble, and the blow sets on John like an eighty horsepower Worthington engine. John, however, seems to be more sensitive respecting the loss of the baby than Mrs. John, and who wouldn't be? after making such strenuous efforts to get an heir without any unnecessary loss of time. The only thing that Mr. Kreigle knows about the matter is that his spouse and the bricklaying Kattrick left Napoleon last Saturday night on the Wabash train, and he supposes that they came to this city. All his efforts to find the guilty pair so far have been unsuccessful. All he objects to is that Kattrick, who pretended to be his friend, should act that way, and steal his whole family without giving him any preliminary warning.

Since writing the above, Mr. Kreigler has discovered that his wife has gone to Muncie, and he has obtained a situation in this city and will remain.

THE "SENTINEL"

Has the Largest Bona Fide Circulation of Any Daily Paper in the State, outside of Indianapolis. Advertisers and Others are Invited to Call at this Office and Verify this Assertion.

AN APOLOGY.

The late hour at which the SENTINEL has been delivered in various portions of the city during the last few evenings was caused by the breaking down of our large press. The demands made upon us by our large and constantly increasing circulation have overtaxed our press facilities with the above result. But the difficulty will be obviated in a very few days, as we have purchased a HOE double cylinder press, with a capacity of 5,000 impressions per hour, which will be placed in this building next week. With that press in operation we shall be able to deliver the SENTINEL in the most remote portions of the city before 6 o'clock, and will also be able to meet the large demand for the paper in surrounding towns and villages, which we have thus far not undertaken to supply. In the meantime, we hope that our friends and patrons will exercise patience.

"THE SENTINEL'S" PLATFORM.

No single member of the council will be permitted to "run" this enterprise to suit himself, or to bulldoze the council or the board of water works trustees, nor will he be permitted to gratify his personal malice at the expense of the people. That might just as well be understood now as hereafter.

THE "SENTINEL" TO-DAY.

The SENTINEL to-day consists of six pages. The supplement contains several chapters of WILKIE COLLINS'S great novel, "The Yellow Mask," a poem written for the SENTINEL, entitled "The Other Side," Scientific Scraps, Musical Melange, Mrs. SPRAGUE'S version of the scandal, WATTERSON on CONKLING, and other interesting miscellany. The regular sheet contains the usual amount of local and telegraphic news, cablegrams, home and telegraphic market reports, state news, general news, etc. Every subscriber to and purchaser of the SENTINEL is entitled to the supplement without extra charge.

BY all means let steam power be used for pumping in our water works, if it is the cheapest; otherwise not.

HENRY WATTERSON'S tribute to CONKLING is a vigorous piece of writing, and a remarkable specimen of scathing invective. It is reprinted in our supplement to day.

IT appears that there were no errors in the construction of water works of Toledo of any importance, and the statement to that effect in last night's SENTINEL was based upon erroneous information.

IT appears that there are twelve councilmen who believe, like the SENTINEL, in "starting right" in the erection of water works. They are Messrs. MCKEAN, HAMILTON, CHITTENDEN, MCCULLOCH, MUHLER, RIEDMILLER, FOX, MOHR, VORDERMARK, DREYER, LILLIE and WILKINSON. These gentlemen are evidently determined that the water works business shall be transacted on business principles, and are entitled to the thanks of the people for protecting their interests.

MR. SOLOMON BASH, councilman from the fifth ward, has the reputation of being a safe and cautious business man. Does any one believe for one moment that, if he were going to build water works as a private enterprise, Mr. BASH would not give a patient, careful and thorough investigation to the question of power, and adopt that system which should prove to be the cheapest and most desirable. He would do this regardless of personal considerations, because it would affect his pocket, and so would any other clear-headed, prudent business man. And it is certainly the duty of Mr. BASH, and every other councilman, and every water works trustee to go about this business just as he would if he were doing it for himself.

WE print in our supplement to-day an interesting addition to the literature of the SPRAGUE-CONKLING difficulty. Mrs. SPRAGUE'S statement is given in full, and should receive public consideration upon its merits. It must be confessed, however, that it does not improve CONKLING'S position, nor that of Mrs. SPRAGUE. Her references to her husband, whose vast fortune she helped to expend, and who, when wealthy, lavished upon her every luxury, are exceedingly brutal and cold blooded and show her to be a heartless woman. Her allusions to the memory of her father are in equally bad taste, for Mrs. SPRAGUE both before and after his death, has taken little pains to protect the good name of that father whose idol she was. Granting all this, however, it is only fair to say that there is no proof of a criminal intimacy between the New York senator and Mrs. SPRAGUE, and that it is possible such an intimacy has never existed. Scandal mongers are always ready to believe the worst, and to allege absolute crime in cases where imprudence is perhaps the only offense. For this reason it is all the more important that women—especially those of high social position, like Mrs. SPRAGUE, who are constantly before the public, should avoid even the appearance of evil—that is, if they value their good names at all.

A tremendous crowd assembled on the fair ground at Connersville on the 14th, the occasion of the first meeting of the old settlers. Speeches were made by Hon. B. F. Claypool and other prominent men.

A Mrs. Gardner, of Frankfort, has given birth to a pair of male twins, well developed in every particular, with the exception that from the umbilicus downward to the tubes they are firmly united. The couplet weighs fifteen pound, and efforts will be made to preserve them as a curiosity.

John Canton, an inmate of the Reform School, at Plainfield, received serious, if not fatal injuries, on the 14th. He was engaged in hauling coal to the institution when his horses became frightened, ran away, threw him out in front of the wagon, and the wheels passed over him, injuring him internally and fracturing the hip bone. His recovery is doubtful.

Sunday a sad suicide occurred at Milltown, Crawford county, by which that town lost a most estimable member of society. Mrs. Blackburn, wife of Uriah Blackburn, is the victim. For some time her husband, a dissipated fellow, had treated her in a very cruel manner. She left her home two days ago on a visit to some relatives. On her return Sunday evening her brutal husband again commenced his abuse of her. She walked out into the garden, drew a pistol from her pocket, and buried the load in her brain.

A New York Tribune Washington special says the administration is not unmindful of the appalling state of affairs reported to exist on account of the hostility of the Mormons to the enforcement of anti-polygamy laws. Secretary McCrary says matters are being closely watched, but nothing has yet occurred which appears to call for official interference. He says the number of troops now in Utah seems to be sufficient to enforce the decrees of the courts and to protect the Gentiles. Should the Mormons venture upon acts of violence, if more troops should become necessary, they are so posted that they can be speedily sent to Utah.

It appears that the American authorities have troubles with other emigrants besides the Mormons, for the records of Castle Garden show that certain European countries are sending their paupers and criminals to this country. Louisa Schapp, a depraved young woman from Switzerland, has just arrived, but she will be sent back. The Castle Garden officials are now on the lookout for several notorious characters who are expected daily. Cripples have been coming to beg. The authorities here will exercise unusual precaution to thwart the efforts to force these criminals and paupers upon the country.

Writing again under date of June 3d, Commodore Shufelt announces the arrival of the Tiaconderoga at St. Paul de Loando, Africa. THE QUEBEC RIOT.

A War of Races Begun—French vs. Irish—Developments Friday Afternoon and Evening.

Further particulars concerning the Quebec riot are contained in the following telegrams dated Friday night:

A meeting of Frenchmen was held in Jacques Cartiermart Hall in the afternoon and assembled on the plains later in the day, and all armed with rifles shot guns and revolvers. A rush was made for the city and the principal streets of St. Louis suburbs invaded, the crowd howling and firing as they ran. The Irishmen of Coves are said to be in motion and the crowd is dispersing. Volunteers will be called out and bloody work is expected.

The Frenchmen being repulsed, the old society men gathered in groups and expressed a determination to keep them out of the street. Two cannon were in position at Kinchellass wharf, and one at Martin's. The men were well armed with revolvers, boat hooks or axes. Blood on the sidewalk showed where the wounded fell. The men warned by the chief of water police not to advance, but persisted. While returning after the defeat they turned occasionally to fire on the assistants, when the procession of people rallied. They went to Cape Blanc and sacked three houses occupied by the Irish. Hardware stores were robbed of firearms, and six or seven guns were taken from the store on Fabrique street. All the shops in Lower Town and Mountain Hill have shutters up. It has been remarked that there were not fifty ship laborers in the whole line of procession. A war of races seemed to have begun. Pierre Giroux is the only person reported killed, but a dozen men are known to be wounded seriously by bullets.

St. Louis, Aug. 15.—Lizzie Schandel, the younger of the two women shot by Thaddeus Carber last night, is still alive, but lies in a very critical condition. Property to the amount of $5,000 belonging to Madame Schandel, her mother, while keeping an assignation house, in which business she forced her daughter to participate, has been discovered and turned over to the public administrator.

New Philadelphia, O., Aug. 15.—There is considerable excitement over the reported attempt to lynch one Weagely, a blacksmith at Strasburg, for joining the Murphys. It is said that the anti-Murphys waylaid Weagely last night, seized, bound and suspended him by a rope from a tree, when through the piteous appeals of his wife he was let down before life was extinct. The anti-Murphys say it was a joke, but Weagely says otherwise.

Boston, Aug. 15.—The Frye murder case has produced intense excitement. The fatal wound is a shot through the heart, but in addition to that there are at least a dozen stabs in the back and numerous bruises on the body, giving evidence of a desperate struggle with the murderers. Frye's watch is gone and pockets rifled. The extent of the robbery is not known. Frye had, as a protege, a young Italian, who had several friends among his own countrymen, and two of these have been arrested under suspicion of cognizance of the murder.

St. Louis, Aug. 15.—The elevator "B," belonging to the Central Elevator Company, situated on the river front near the foot of Plumb street, caught fire a few minutes before 11 o'clock to-night, and at this writing is nearly destroyed. It contained about 100,000 bushels of grain, which will be destroyed or ruined for merchantable purposes. The building cost $75,000 three years ago, and was insured for $40,000. Adjoining on the south were the three extensive ice houses of Hazzard & Wilson, which were consumed.

Titusville, Pa., Aug. 15.—The tank containing 18,000 barrels of oil, which was struck by lightning at Parkers Landing yesterday morning, finished burning last evening, and was a total loss. A second tank standing near and containing 30,000 barrels became so heated that after smouldering all day it suddenly burst this evening, and now is in a mass of flames and will be a total loss. There were ten men on top of the tank at the time of the explosion, four of whom were severely and four of the others slightly injured.

Delphos, Aug. 15.—As the express from the west, due here at 3:30 today, arrived a lively and sensational scene occurred to the great astonishment of all who witnessed it. Miss Jennie Moore, a young lady of eighteen, attacked Sam Ellis, runner for Brown's Hotel, and administered a severe cowhiding. He being taken by surprise tried to avoid the blows by running away. The young lady, however, proved to be an adept at this, keeping up and showering on him telling blows. Miss Moore claims frequent remarks reflecting on her character made by Ellis had reached her, and having no brother to protect her from insults, took this mode of defending herself.

Philadelphia, Aug. 15.—The inquest over the bodies of the five persons killed by the collision of the two trains on the Atlantic City Railway yesterday, returned a verdict that J. S. Verts, assistant superintendent, is criminally censurable for employing incompetent persons to manage trains. The inquest showed the running of trains amounted to guess-work; that the assistant superintendent, as a rule, gave his messages orally to the telegraph operator at Camden, and that the transmission of one of that description led to the disaster. The freight conductor swore he knew nothing about running trains and had charge yesterday for the first time.

SPORTING NOTES.

Rowell and Brown, pedestrians, have sailed for the United States.

Base ball: Providence 16, Troys 7; Nationals 3, Worcesters 15; Buffalos 10, Cincinnati 9; Cleveland 3, Chicagos 0; Bostons 13, Stars 0.

Justice Elliott of Brooklyn, the boat builder, says every man who has rowed against Hanlan has, in his opinion, had an understanding as to the winner, and that is the way Hanlan became so popular and the Hanlan club so famous. The whole story of the club is shown in the payment of £200 to the English rower, Elliott, to enable him to make up his stake for the late race. It is a pity that we cannot keep the sport above the reach of crooked dealing. Courtney, Ross or Riley can beat Hanlan.

It is said there will be at least two Yankees in the next great walking match at New York, Weston, the Rhode Islander, and Taylor, the Vermonter. The other entries, as far as known, are the Englishmen, Rowell, Bloomer, Brown and Hazzard, and Ennis, Panchort and Khrone. It is thought Guyon will also enter, and perhaps Fitzgerald, the man who beat Taylor in a twenty-mile run. A letter from England says they have just lost their heads over there on the walking question. Rowing is nowhere. All pedestrians want to come over and get a show for big gate money, and already forty-four contestants are entered.

SALT RHEUM.

Life a Burden From the Sufferings Caused by This Terrible Disease.

Messrs. WEEKS & POTTER: Gentlemen—Please accept my most grateful thanks for the great, very great, comfort I have received from the use of your CUTICURA.

For the past eight or nine years I have been troubled with that dreadful disease, Salt Rheum.

For months I would be helpless—my very life a burden to me.

I have used everything in the shape of medicine, both external and internal, but with no effect.

My hands were in a terrible condition, the backs of them being all raw, and I thought I would try CUTICURA.

I tried it, and lo! it was as if a miracle had been performed, for I will take my oath that three applications my hands were as smooth as a new-born babe's.

I presume there are hundreds, if not thousands, who know of my case, among whom there may be some one similarly afflicted, and if so I would earnestly advise him to give CUTICURA a trial.

Yours, very thankfully,

Messrs. WEEKS & POTTER: Gentlemen—Having been troubled for many years with the Tetter or Salt Rheum, and spent many a hard-earned dollar, I was given a trial of your CUTICURA, and, thank God, my hands are well. I never had anything do me good like that.

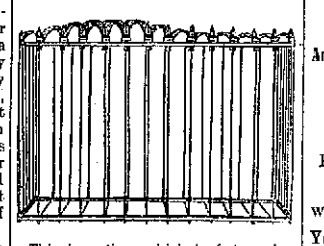

You may put this in the paper and welcome, and may it do some other poor sufferer the same good it has done me! I am well known here, having lived here almost fifteen years and kept boarders for a living, and sometimes my heart was sore, thinking I would have to give up altogether with my sore hands; but having a small family to take care of; but, oh! thank God, my hands are well, so I again return thanks. Yours respectfully,
ELIZABETH BUCKLEY.

THE "SENTINEL"

Has the Largest Bona Fide Circulation of Any Daily Paper in the State, outside of Indianapolis. Advertisers and Others are Invited to Call at this Office and Verify this Assertion.

AN APOLOGY.

The late hour at which the SENTINEL has been delivered in various portions of the city during the last few evenings was caused by the breaking down of our large press. The demands made upon us by our large and constantly increasing circulation have overtaxed our press facilities with the above result. But the difficulty will be obviated in a very few days, as we have purchased a HOE double cylinder press, with a capacity of 5,000 impressions per hour, which will be placed in this building next week. With that press in operation we shall be able to deliver the SENTINEL in the most remote portions of the city before 6 o'clock, and will also be able to meet the large demand for the paper in surrounding towns and villages, which we have thus far not undertaken to supply. In the meantime, we hope that our friends and patrons will exercise patience.

"THE SENTINEL'S" PLATFORM.

No single member of the council will be permitted to "run" this enterprise to suit himself, or to bulldoze the council or the board of water works trustees, nor will he be permitted to gratify his personal malice at the expense of the people. That might just as well be understood now as hereafter.

THE "SENTINEL" TO-DAY.

The SENTINEL to-day consists of six pages. The supplement contains several chapters of WILKIE COLLINS'S great novel, "The Yellow Mask," a poem written for the SENTINEL, entitled "The Other Side," Scientific Scraps, Musical Melange, Mrs. SPRAGUE'S version of the scandal, WATTERSON on CONKLING, and other interesting miscellany. The regular sheet contains the usual amount of local and telegraphic news, cablegrams, home and telegraphic market reports, state news, general news, etc. Every subscriber to and purchaser of the SENTINEL is entitled to the supplement without extra charge.

BY all means let steam power be used for pumping in our water works, if it is the cheapest; otherwise not.

HENRY WATTERSON'S tribute to CONKLING is a vigorous piece of writing, and a remarkable specimen of scathing invective. It is reprinted in our supplement to day.

IT appears that there were no errors in the construction of water works of Toledo of any importance, and the statement to that effect in last night's SENTINEL was based upon erroneous information.

IT appears that there are twelve councilmen who believe, like the SENTINEL, in "starting right" in the erection of water works. They are Messrs. MCKEAN, HAMILTON, CHITTENDEN, MCCULLOCH, MUHLER, RIEDMILLER, FOX, MOHR, VORDERMARK, DREYER, LILLIE and WILKINSON. These gentlemen are evidently determined that the water works business shall be transacted on business principles, and are entitled to the thanks of the people for protecting their interests.

MR. SOLOMON BASH, councilman from the fifth ward, has the reputation of being a safe and cautious business man. Does any one believe for one moment that, if he were going to build water works as a private enterprise, Mr. BASH would not give a patient, careful and thorough investigation to the question of power, and adopt that system which should prove to be the cheapest and most desirable. He would do this regardless of personal considerations, because it would affect his pocket, and so would any other clear-headed, prudent business man. And it is certainly the duty of Mr. BASH, and every other councilman, and every water works trustee to go about this business just as he would if he were doing it for himself.

WE print in our supplement to-day an interesting addition to the literature of the SPRAGUE-CONKLING difficulty. Mrs. SPRAGUE'S statement is given in full, and should receive public consideration upon its merits. It must be confessed, however, that it does not improve CONKLING'S position, nor that of Mrs. SPRAGUE. Her references to her husband, whose vast fortune she helped to expend, and who, when wealthy, lavished upon her every luxury, are exceedingly brutal and cold blooded and show her to be a heartless woman. Her allusions to the memory of her father are in equally bad taste, for Mrs. SPRAGUE both before and after his death, has taken little pains to protect the good name of that father whose idol she was. Granting all this, however, it is only fair to say that there is no proof of a criminal intimacy between the New York senator and Mrs. SPRAGUE, and that it is possible such an intimacy has never existed. Scandal mongers are always ready to believe the worst, and to allege absolute crime in cases whore imprudence is perhaps the only offense. For this reason it is all the more important that women—especially those of high social position, like Mrs. SPRAGUE, who are constantly before the public, should avoid even the appearance of evil—that is, if they value their good names at all.

His recovery is doubtful.

Sunday a sad suicide occurred at Milltown, Crawford county, by which that town lost a most estimable member of society. Mrs. Blackburn, wife of Uriah Blackburn, is the victim. For some time her husband, a dissipated fellow, had treated her in a very cruel manner. She left her home two days ago on a visit to some relatives. On her return Sunday evening her brutal husband again commenced his abuse of her. She walked out into the garden, drew a pistol from her pocket, and buried the load in her brain.

A New York Tribune Washington special says the administration is not unmindful of the appalling state of affairs reported to exist on account of the hostility of the Mormons to the enforcement of anti-polygamy laws. Secretary McCrary says matters are being closely watched, but nothing has yet occurred which appears to call for official interference. He says the number of troops now in Utah seems to be sufficient to enforce the decrees of the courts and to protect the Gentiles. Should the Mormons venture upon acts of violence, if more troops should become necessary, they are so posted that they can be speedily sent to Utah.

It appears that the American authorities have troubles with other emigrants besides the Mormons, for the records of Castle Garden show that certain European countries are sending their paupers and criminals to this country. Louisa Schapp, a depraved young woman from Switzerland, has just arrived, but she will be sent back. The Castle Garden officials are now on the lookout for several notorious characters who are expected daily. Cripples have been coming to beg. The authorities here will exercise unusual precaution to thwart the efforts to force these criminals and paupers upon the country.

THE QUEBEC RIOT.

A War of Races Begun—French vs. Irish—Developments Friday Afternoon and Evening.

Further particulars concerning the Quebec riot are contained in the following telegrams dated Friday night:

A meeting of Frenchmen was held in Jacques Cartiermart Hall in the afternoon and assembled on the plains later in the day, and all armed with rifles shot guns and revolvers. A rush was made for the city and the principal streets of St. Louis suburbs invaded, the crowd howling and firing as they ran. The Irishmen of Coves are said to be in motion and the crowd is dispersing. Volunteers will be called out and bloody work is expected.

The Frenchmen being repulsed, the old society men gathered in groups and expressed a determination to keep them out of the street. Two cannon were in position at Kinchellass wharf, and one at Martin's. The men were well armed with revolvers, boat hooks or axes. Blood on the sidewalk showed where the wounded fell. The men warned by the chief of water police not to advance, but persisted. While returning after the defeat they turned occasionally to fire on the assistants, when the procession of people rallied. They went to Cape Blane and sacked three houses occupied by the Irish. Hardware stores were robbed of firearms, and six or seven guns were taken from the store on Fabrique street. All the shops in Lower Town and Mountain Hill have shutters up. It has been remarked that there were not fifty ship laborers in the whole line of procession. A war of races seemed to have begun. Pierre Giroux is the only person reported killed, but a dozen men are known to be wounded seriously by bullets.

New Philadelphia, O., Aug. 15.—There is considerable excitement over the reported attempt to lynch one Weagely, a blacksmith at Strasburg, for joining the Murphys. It is said that the anti-Murphys waylaid Weagely last night, seized, bound and suspended him by a rope from a tree, when through the piteous appeals of his wife he was let down before life was extinct. The anti-Murphys say it was a joke, but Weagely says otherwise.

Boston, Aug. 15.—The Frye murder case has produced intense excitement. The fatal wound is a shot through the heart, but in addition to that there are at least a dozen stabs in the back and numerous bruises on the body, giving evidence of a desperate struggle with the murderers. Frye's watch is gone and pockets rifled. The extent of the robbery is not known. Frye had, as a protege, a young Italian, who had several friends among his own countrymen, and two of these have been arrested under suspicion of cognizance of the murder.

St. Louis, Aug. 15.—The elevator "B," belonging to the Central Elevator Company, situated on the river front near the foot of Plumb street, caught fire a few minutes before 11 o'clock to-night, and at this writing is nearly destroyed. It contained about 100,000 bushels of grain, which will be destroyed or ruined for merchantable purposes. The building cost $75,000 three years ago, and was insured for $40,000. Adjoining on the south were the three extensive ice houses of Hazzard & Wilson, which were consumed.

There were ten men on top of the tank at the time of the explosion, four of whom were severely and four of the others slightly injured.

Delphos, Aug. 15.—As the express from the west, due here at 3:30 today, arrrived a lively and sensational scene occurred to the great astonishment of all who witnessed it. Miss Jennie Moore, a young lady of eighteen, attacked Sam Ellis, runner for Brown's Hotel, and administered a severe cowhiding. He being taken by surprise tried to avoid the blows by running away. The young lady, however, proved to be an adept at this, keeping up and showering on him telling blows. Miss Moore claims frequent remarks reflecting on her character made by Ellis had reached her, and having no brother to protect her from insults, took this mode of defending herself.

Philadelphia, Aug. 15.—The inquest over the bodies of the five persons killed by the collision of the two trains on the Atlantic City Railway yesterday, returned a verdict that J. S. Verts, assistant superintendent, is criminally censurable for employing incompetent persons to manage trains. The inquest showed the running of trains amounted to guess-work; that the assistant superintendent, as a rule, gave his messages orally to the telegraph operator at Camden, and that the transmission of one of that description led to the disaster. The freight conductor swore he knew nothing about running trains and had charge yesterday for the first time.

SPORTING NOTES.

Rowell and Brown, pedestrians, have sailed for the United States.

Base ball: Providence 16, Troys 7; Nationals 3, Worcesters 15; Buffalos 10, Cincinnati 9; Cleveland 3, Chicagos 0; Bostons 13, Stars 0.

Justice Elliott of Brooklyn, the boat builder, says every man who has rowed against Hanlan has, in his opinion, had an understanding as to the winner, and that is the way Hanlan became so popular and the Hanlan club so famous. The whole story of the club is shown in the payment of £200 to the English rower, Elliott, to enable him to make up his stake for the late race. It is a pity that we cannot keep the sport above the reach of crooked dealing. Courtney, Ross or Riley can beat Hanlan.

It is said there will be at least two Yankees in the next great walking match at New York, Weston, the Rhode Islander, and Taylor, the Vermonter. The other entries, as fas as known, are the Englishmen, Rowell, Bloomer, Brown and Hazzard, and Ennis, Panchort and Khrone. It is thought Guyon will also enter, and perhaps Fitzgerald, the man who beat Taylor in a twenty-mile run. A letter from England says they have just lost their heads over there on the walking question. Rowing is nowhere. All pedestrians want to come over and get a show for big gate money, and already forty-four contestants are entered.

SALT RHEUM.

Life a Burden From the Sufferings Caused by This Terrible Disease.

MESSRS. WEEKS & POTTER: Gentlemen—Please accept my most grateful thanks for the great, very great, comfort I have received from the use of your CUTICURA.

For the past eight or nine years I have been troubled with that dreadful disease, Salt Rheum.

For months I would be helpless—my very life a burden to me.

I have used everything in the shape of medicine, both external and internal, but with no effect.

My hands were in a terrible condition, the backs of them being all raw, and I thought I would try CUTICURA.

I tried it, and lo! it was as if a miracle had been performed, for I will take my oath that in three applications my hands were as smooth as a new-born babe's.

I presume there are hundreds, if not thousands, who know of my case, among whom there may be some one similarly afflicted, and if so I would earnestly advise him to give CUTICURA a trial.

Yours, very thankfully,
A. D. BAKER, Ticket Agent C. S. R. R.

MESSRS. WEEKS & POTTER: Gentlemen—Having been troubled for many years with the Tetter or Salt Rheum, and spent many a hard-earned dollar, I was given a trial of your CUTICURA, and, thank God, my hands are well. I never had anything do me good like that.

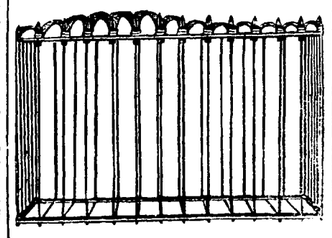

You may put this in the paper and welcome, and may it do some other poor sufferer the same good it has done me! I am well known here, having lived here almost fifteen years and kept boarders for a living, and sometimes my heart was sore, thinking I would have to give up altogether with my sore hands, and having a small family to take care of; but oh! thank God, my hands are well, so I again return thanks. Yours respectfully,
ELIZABETH BUCKLEY.

THE OTHER SIDE.

"If any among ye be without sin, let him cast the first stone."

I know there's a harp lying low by the river,
Its sweet beauty dimmed by a Magdalen's tears;
She kneels there in sorrow, her frail arms extended;
She pleads but in vain, they turn a deaf ear—
She is pleading to tell them the sorrowful story
Of a pure, perfect love, that knew nothing of sin;
A love that might have been any man's glory,
She shyly and tenderly lavished on him.

But her sisters pass by her, they scorn her sad story;
The harp lying dark by the waters of sin,
May lie there forever, they will not restore it,
Nor make her dark life what it once would have been
Had not the base tempter, with sinister cunning,
And vile hellish arts, by pure (!) women upheld,
Stole into her Eden and plucked the bright jewel,
Leaving her to her sorrow, whatever befel.

But listen, from whence come those sweet strains of music?
The vibrating air wafts low where she lies;
Her tear-bedimmed face she uplifts to the moonlight,
With one pale, slender hand she shades her dark eyes;
She looks in on a scene that fills her with hatred,
She sees her seducer, the cause of her sin,
The center of honor, all eager to hear him,
While wide through the land the earthly harps ring.

Christian mothers smile on him, they bring their young daughters;
In honor they place them upon his right hand,
While she, the poor victim, left alone in her sorrow,
Do you wonder a demon is let loose in the land?
Then let us remember the words of our Savior,
Nor scorn her who sits where the dark waters glide.
The sweet harp of heaven shall not ring its full numbers,
Till redeemed, in her whiteness, she stands by His side.

THE YELLOW MASK.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

PART THIRD.

"The Yellow Mask!" whispered the waiting-girls nervously, crowding together behind the table. "The Yellow Mask again!"

"Make her speak!"

"Ask her to have something!"

"This gentleman will ask her. Speak to her, sir. Do speak to her! She glides about in that fearful yellow dress like a ghost."

Fabio looked around mechanically at the girl who was whispering to him. He saw at the same time that Nanina still kept her head turned away, and that she had her handkerchief at her eyes. She was evidently struggling yet with the agitation produced by their unexpected meeting, and was, most probably for that reason, the only person in the room not conscious of the presence of the Yellow Mask.

"Speak to her, sir. Do speak to her!" whispered two of the waiting-girls together.

Fabio turned again toward the table. The black eyes were still gleaming at him from behind the tawny yellow of the mask. He nodded to the girls who had just spoken, cast one farewell look at Nanina, and moved down the room to get round to the side of the table at which the Yellow Mask was standing. Step by step as he moved the bright eyes followed him. Steadily and more steadily their evil light seemed to shine through and through him, as he turned the corner of the table, and approached the still, spectral figure.

He came close up to the woman, but she never moved; her eyes never wavered for an instant. He stopped and tried to speak; but the chill struck through him again. An overpowering dread, an unutterable loathing seized on him; all sense of outer things—the whispering of the waiting-girls behind the table, the gentle cadence of the dance-music, the distant hum of joyous talk—suddenly left him. He turned away shuddering, and quitted the room.

Following the sound of the music, and desiring before all things now to join the crowd wherever it was largest, he was stopped in one of the smaller apartments by a gentleman who had just risen from the card-table, and who held out his hand with the cordiality of an old friend.

"Welcome back to the world, Count Fabio!" he began gayly, then suddenly checked himself. "Why, you look pale, and your hand feels cold. Not ill, I hope?"

"No, no. I have been rather startled—I can't say why—by a very strangely dressed woman, who fairly stared me out of countenance."

"You don't mean the Yellow Mask?"

"Yes, I do. Have you seen her?"

"Everybody has seen her; but nobody can make her unmask, or get her to speak. Our host has not the slightest notion who she is; and our hostess is horribly frightened at her. For my part, I think she has given us quite enough of her mystery and her grim dress; and if my name, instead of being nothing but plain Andrea d'Arbino, was Marquis Melani, I would say to her 'Madam, we are here to laugh and amuse ourselves; suppose you open your lips, and charm us by appearing in a prettier dress!'"

During this conversation they had sat down together, with their backs toward the door, by the side of one of the card-tables. While D'Arbino was speaking, Fabio suddenly felt himself shuddering again, and became conscious of a sound of low breathing behind him.

He turned round instantly, and there, standing between them, and peering down at them, was the Yellow Mask!

Fabio started up, and his friend followed his example. Again the gleaming black eyes rested steadily on the young nobleman's face, and again their look chilled him to the heart.

"Yellow Lady, do you know my friend?" exclaimed D'Arbino, with mock solemnity.

There was no answer. The fatal eyes never moved from Fabio's face.

"Yellow Lady," continued the other, "listen to the music. Will you dance with me?"

The eyes looked away, and the figure glided slowly from the room.

"My dear Count," said D'Arbino, "that woman seems to have quite an effect on you. I declare she has left you paler than ever. Come into the supper-room with me, and have some wine; you really look as if you wanted it."

They went at once to the large refreshment-room. Nearly all the guests had by this time begun to dance again. They had the whole apartment, therefore, almost entirely to themselves.

Among the decorations of the room, which were not strictly in accordance with genuine Arcadian simplicity, was a large looking-glass, placed over a well-furnished sideboard. D'Arbino led Fabio in this direction, exchanging greetings as he advanced with a gentleman who stood near the glass looking into it, and carelessly fanning himself with his mask.

"My dear friend!" cried D'Arbino, "you are the very man to lead us straight to the best bottle of wine in the palace. Count Fabio, let me present to you my intimate and good friend, the Cavaliere Finello, with whose family I know you are well acquainted. Finello, the Count is a little out of spirits, and I have prescribed a good dose of wine. I see a whole row of bottles at your side, and I leave it to you to apply the remedy. Glasses there! three glasses, my lovely shepherdess with the black eyes—the three largest you have got."

The glasses were brought; the Cavaliere Finello chose a particular bottle, and filled them. All three gentlemen turned round to the sideboard to use it as a table, and thus necessarily faced the looking-glass.

"Now let us drink the toast of toasts," said D'Arbino. "Finello, Count Fabio—the ladies of Pisa!"

Fabio raised the wine to his lips, and was on the point of drinking it, when he saw reflected in the glass the figure of the Yellow Mask. The glittering eyes were again fixed on him, and the yellow-hooded head bowed slowly, as if in acknowledgment of the toast he was about to drink. For the third time the strange chill seized him, and he set down his glass of wine untasted.

"Have you any dislike, Count, to that particular wine?" inquired the Cavaliere.

"The Yellow Mask!" whispered Fabio. "The Yellow Mask again!"

They all three turned round directly toward the door. But it was too late—the figure had disappeared.

"Does any one know who this Yellow Mask is?" asked Finello. "One may guess by the walk that the figure is a woman's. Perhaps it may be the strange color she has chosen for her dress, or perhaps her stealthy way of moving from room to room; but there is certainly something mysterious and startling about her."

"Startling enough, as the Count would tell you," said D'Arbino. "The Yellow Mask has been responsible for his loss of spirits and change of complexion, and now she has prevented him even from drinking his wine."

"I can't account for it," said Fabio, looking round him uneasily; "but this is the third room into which she has followed me—the third time she has seemed to fix her eyes on me alone. I suppose my nerves are hardly in a fit state yet for masked balls and adventures; the sight of her seems to chill me. Who can she be?"

"If she followed me a fourth time," said Finello, "I should insist on her unmasking."

"And suppose she refused?" asked his friend.

"Then I should take her mask off for her."

"It is impossible to do that with a woman," said Fabio. "I prefer trying to lose her in the crowd. Excuse me, gentlemen, if I leave you to finish the wine, and then to meet me, if you like, in the great ball-room."

He retired as he spoke, put on his mask, and joined the dancers immediately, taking care to keep always in the most crowded corner of the apartment. For some time this plan of action proved successful, and he saw no more of the mysterious yellow domino. Ere long, however, some new dances were arranged, in which the great majority of the persons in the ball-room took part; the figures resembling the old English country-dances in this respect, that the ladies and gentlemen were placed in long rows opposite to each other. The sets consisted of about twenty couples each, placed sometimes across, and sometimes along the apartment; and the spectators were all required to move away on either side, and range themselves close to the walls. As Fabio among others complied with this necessity, he looked down a row of dancers waiting during the performance of the orchestral prelude; and there, watching him again, from the opposite end of the lane formed by the gentlemen on one side and the ladies on the other, he saw the Yellow Mask.

He moved abruptly back toward another row of dancers, placed at right angles to the first row; and there again, at the opposite end of the gay lane of brightly-dressed figures, was the Yellow Mask. He slipped into the middle of the room, but it was only to find her occupying his former position near the wall, and still, in spite of his disguise, watching him through row after row of dancers. The persecution began to grow intolerable; he felt a kind of angry curiosity mingling now with the vague dread that had hitherto oppressed him. Finello's advice recurred to his memory; and he determined to make the woman unmask at all hazards. With this intention he returned to the supper-room in which he had left his friends.

They were gone, probably to the ball-room to look for him. Plenty of wine was still left on the sideboard, and he poured himself out a glass. Finding that his hand trembled as he did so, he drank several more glasses in quick succession, to nerve himself for the approaching encounter with the Yellow Mask. While he was drinking he expected every moment to see her in the looking-glass again; but she never appeared—and yet he felt almost certain that he had detected her gliding out out after him when he left the ball-room.

He thought it possible that she might be waiting for him in one of the smaller apartments, and, taking off his mask, walked through several of them without meeting her, until he came to the door of the refreshment-room in which Nanina and he had recognized each other. The waiting-woman behind the table, who had first spoken to him, caught sight of him now, and ran round to the door.

"Don't come in and speak to Nanina again," she said, mistaking the purpose which had brought him to the door. "What with frightening her first, and making her cry afterward, you have rendered her quite unfit for her work. The steward is in there at this moment, very good-natured, but not very sober. He says she is pale and red-eyed, and not fit to be a shepherdess any longer, and that, as she will not be missed now, she may go home if she likes. We have got her an old cloak, and she is going to try and slip through the rooms unobserved, to get down stairs and change her dress. Don't speak to her, pray, or you will only make her cry again; and what is worse, make the steward fancy—"

She stopped at that last word, and pointed suddenly over Fabio's shoulder.

"The Yellow Mask!" she exclaimed. "Oh, sir, draw her away into the ball-room, and give Nanina a change of getting out!"

Fabio turned directly, and approached the Mask, who, as they looked at each other, slowly retreated before him. The waiting-woman, seeing the yellow figure retire, hastened back to Nanina in the refreshment-room.

Slowly the masked woman retreated from one apartment to another till she entered a corridor brilliantly lit up and beautifully ornamented with flowers. On the right hand this corridor led to the ball-room; on the left to an antechamber at the head of the palace staircase. The Yellow Mask went on a few paces toward the left, then stopped. The bright eyes fixed themselves as before on Fabio's face, but only for a moment. He heard a light step behind him, and then he saw the eyes move. Following the direction they took, he turned round, and discovered Nanina, wrapped up in the old cloak which was to enable her to get down stairs unobserved.

"Oh, how can I get out? how can I get out?" cried the girl, shrinking back affrightedly as she saw the Yellow Mask.

"That way," said Fabio, pointing in the direction of the ball-room. "Nobody will notice you in the cloak; it will only be thought some new disguise." He took her arm as she spoke, to reassure her, and continued in a whisper, "Don't forget to-morrow."

At the same moment he felt a hand laid on him. It was the hand of the masked woman, and it put him back from Nanina.

In spite of himself, he trembled at her touch, but still retained presence of mind enough to sign to the girl to make her escape. With a look of eager inquiry in the direction of the Mask, and a half suppressed exclamation of terror, she obeyed him, and hastened away toward the ball-room.

"We are alone," said Fabio, confronting the gleaming black eyes, and reaching out his hand resolutely toward the Yellow Mask. "Tell me who you are, and why you follow me, or I will uncover your face, and solve the mystery for myself."

The woman pushed his hand aside, and drew back a few paces, but never spoke a word. He followed her. There was not an instant to be lost, for just then the sound of footsteps hastily approaching the corridor became audible.

"Now or never," he whispered to himself, and snatched at the mask.

His arm was again thrust aside; but this time the woman raised her disengaged hand at the same moment, and removed the yellow mask.

The lamps shed their soft light full on her face.

It was the face of his dead wife.

CHAPTER IV.

Signor Andrea d'Arbino, searching vainly through the various rooms in the palace for Count Fabio d'Ascoli, and trying, as a last resource, the corridor leading to the ball-room and grand stair-case, discovered his friend lying on the floor in a swoon, without any living creature near him. Determining to avoid alarming the guests if possible, D'Arbino first sought help in the antechamber. He found there the Marquis's valet, assisting the Cavaliere Finello (who was just taking his departure) to put on his cloak.

While Finello and his friend carried Fabio to an open window in the antechamber, the valet procured some iced water. This simple remedy, and the change of atmosphere, proved enough to restore the fainting man to his senses, but hardly—as it seemed to his friends—to his former self. They noticed a change to blankness and stillness in his face, and when he spoke an indescribable alteration in the tone of his voice.

"I found you in a room in the corridor," said D'Arbino. "What made you faint? Don't you remember? Was it the heat?"

Fabio waited for a moment, painfully collecting his ideas. He looked at the valet, and Finello signed to the man to withdraw.

"Was it the heat?" repeated D'Arbino.

"No," answered Fabio, in strangely hushed steady tones. "I have seen the face that was behind the yellow mask."

"Well?"

"It was the face of my dead wife."

"Your dead wife!"

"When the mask was removed I saw her face. Not as I remember it in the pride of her youth and beauty—not even as I remember her on her sick-bed—but as I remember her in her coffin."

"Count! for God's sake, rouse yourself! Collect your thoughts—remember where you are—and free your mind of its horrible delusion."

"Spare me all remonstrances; I am not fit to bear them. My life has only one object now—the punishing of this mystery to the end. Will you help me? I am scarcely fit to act for myself."

He still spoke in the same unnaturally hushed, deliberate tones. D'Arbino and Finello exchanged glances behind him as he rose from the sofa on which he had hitherto been lying.

"We will help you in everything," said D'Arbino soothingly. "Trust in us to the end. What do you wish to do first?"

"The figure must have gone through this room. Let us descend the staircase and ask the servants if they have seen it pass."

(Both D'Arbino and Finello remarked that he did not say her.)

They inquired down to the very courtyard. Not one of the servants had seen the Yellow Mask.

The last resource was the porter at the outer gate. They applied to him; and in answer to their questions he asserted that he had most certainly seen a lady in a yellow domino and mask drive away, about half an hour before, in a hired coach.

"Should you remember the coachman again?" asked D'Arbino.

"Perfectly; he is an old friend of mine."

"And you know where he lives?"

"Yes; as well as I know where I do."

"Any reward you like, if you can get somebody to mind your lodge, and can take us to that house."

In a few minutes they were following the porter through the dark, silent streets. "We had better try the stables first," said the man, "My friend the coachman will hardly have had time to do more than set the lady down. We shall most likely catch him just putting up his horses."

The porter turned out to be right. On entering the stable-yard, they found that the empty coach had just driven into it.

"You have been taking home a lady in a yellow domino from the masquerade?" said D'Arbino, putting some money into the coachman's hand.

"Yes, sir; I was engaged by that lady for the evening—engaged to drive her to the hall as well as to drive her home."

"Where did you take her from?"

"From a very extraordinary place—from the gate of the Campo Santo burial-ground."

During this colloquy Finello and D'Arbino had been standing with Fabio between them, each giving him an arm. The instant the last answer was given, he reeled back with a cry of horror.

"Where have you taken her to now?" asked D'Arbino. He looked, about him nervously as he put the question, and spoke for the first time in a whisper.

"To the Campo Santo again," said the coachman.

Fabio suddenly drew his arms out of the arms of his friends, and sank to his knees on the ground, hiding his face. From some broken ejaculations which escaped him, it seemed as if he dreaded that his senses were leaving him, and that he was praying to be preserved in his right mind.

"Why is he so silently agitated?" said Finello eagerly to his friend.

"Hush!" returned the other. "You heard him say that when he saw the face behind the yellow mask, it was the face of his dead wife?"

"Yes. But what then?"

"His wife was buried in the Campo Santo."

CHAPTER V.

Of all the persons who had been present, in any capacity, at the Marquis Melani's ball, the earliest riser on the morning after it was Nanina. The agitation produced by the strange events in which she had been concerned destroyed the very idea of sleep. Through the hours of darkness she could not even close her eyes; and, as soon as the new day broke, she rose to breathe the early morning air at her window, and to think in perfect tranquillity over all that had passed since she entered the Melani Palace to wait on the guests at the masquerade.

On reaching home the previous night, all her other sensations had been absorbed in a vague feeling of mingled dread and curiosity, produced by the sight of the weird figure in the yellow mask, which she had left standing alone with Fabio in the palace corridor. The morning light, however, suggested new thoughts. She now opened the note which the young nobleman had pressed into her hand, and read over and over again the hurried pencil lines scrawled on the paper. Could there be any harm, any forgetfulness of her own duty, in using the key inclosed in the note, and keeping her appointment in the Ascoli gardens at ten o'clock? Surely not—surely the last sentence he had written, "Believe in my truth and honor, Nanina, for I believe implicitly in yours," was enough to satisfy her this time that she could not be doing wrong in listening for once to the pleading of her own heart. And besides, there in her lap lay the key of the wicket-gate. It was absolutely necessary to use that, if only for the purpose of giving it back safely into the hand of its owner.

As this last thought was passing through her mind, and plausibly overcoming any faint doubts and difficulties which she might still have left, she was startled by a sudden knocking at the street door; and, looking out of the window immediately, saw a man in livery standing in the street, anxiously peering up at the house to see if his knocking had aroused anybody.

"Does Marta Angrisani, the sick-nurse, live here?" inquired the man, as soon as Nanina showed herself at the window.

"Yes," she answered. "Must I call her up? Is there some person ill?"

"Call her up directly," said the servant; "she is wanted at the Ascoli Palace. My master, Count Fabio—"

Nanina waited to hear no more. She flew to the room in which the sick-nurse slept, and awoke her, almost roughly, in an instant.

"He is ill!" she cried breathlessly. "Oh, make haste, make haste! He is ill, and he has sent for you!"

Marta inquired who had sent for her, and on being informed, promised to lose no time. Nanina ran down stairs to tell the servant that the sick-nurse was getting on her clothes. The man's serious expression, when she came close to him, terrified her. All her usual self-distrust vanished; and she entreated him, without attempting to conceal her anxiety, to tell her particularly what his master's illness was, and how it had affected him so suddenly after the ball.

"I know nothing about it," answered the man, noticing Nanina's manner as she put her question with some surprise, "except that my master was brought home by two gentlemen, friends of his, about a couple of hours ago, in a very sad state—half out of his mind, as it seemed to me. I gathered from what was said that he had got a dreadful shock from seeing some woman take off her mask, and show her face to him at the ball. How that could be I don't in the least understand; but I know that when the doctor was sent for, he looked very serious, and talked about fearing brain-fever."

Here the servant stopped; for, to his astonishment, he saw Nanina suddenly turn away from him, and then heard her crying bitterly as she went back into the house.

Marta Angrisani had huddled on her clothes, and was looking at herself in the glass to see that she was sufficiently presentable to appear at the palace, when she felt two arms flung round her neck; and, before she could say a word, found Nanina sobbing on her bosom.

"He is ill—he is in danger!" cried the girl. "I must go with you to help him. You have always been kind to me, Marta—he kinder than ever now. Take me with you—take me with you to the palace!"

"You, child!" exclaimed the nurse, gently unclasping her arms.

"Yes—yes! if it is only for an hour," pleaded Nanina—"if it is only for one little hour every day. You have only to say that I am your helper, and they would let me in. Marta! I shall break my heart if I can't see him, and help him to get well again."

The nurse still hesitated. Nanina clasped her round the neck once more, and laid her cheek—burning-hot now, though the tears had been streaming down it but an instant before—close to the good woman's face.

"I love him, Marta; great as he is, I love him with all my heart and soul and strength," she went on, in quick, eager, whispering tones; "and he loves me. He would have married me, if I had not gone away to save him from it. I could keep my love for him a secret while he was well; I could stifle it, and crush it down, and wither it up by absence. But now he is ill, it gets beyond me; I can't master it. Oh, Marta! don't break my heart by denying me! I have suffered so much for his sake, that I have earned the right to nurse him!"

Marta was not proof against this last appeal. She had one great and rare merit for a middle-aged woman—she had not forgotten her own youth.

"Come, child," said she soothingly; "I won't attempt to deny you. Dry your eyes, put on your mantilla; and, when we get face to face with the doctor, try to look as old and ugly as you can; if you want to be let into the sick-room alone with me."

The ordeal of medical scrutiny was passed more easily than Marta Angrisani had anticipated. It was of great importance, in the doctor's opinion, that the sick man should see familiar faces at his bedside. Nanina had only, therefore, to state that he knew her well, and that she had sat to him as a model in the days when he was learning the art of sculpture, to be immediately accepted as Marta's privileged assistant in the sick-room.

The worst apprehensions felt by the doctor for the patient were soon realized. The fever flew to his brain. For nearly six weeks he lay prostrate, at the mercy of death; now raging with the wild strength of delirium, and now sunk in the speechless, motionless sleepless exhaustion which was his only repose. At last the blessed day came when he enjoyed his first sleep, and when the doctor began, for the first time, to talk of the future with hope. Even then, however, the same terrible peculiarity marked his light dreams which had previously shown itself in his fierce delirium. From the faintly uttered, broken phrases which dropped from him when he slept, as from the wild words which burst from him when his senses were deranged, the one sad discovery inevitably resulted, that his mind was still haunted, day and night, hour after hour, by the figure in the yellow mask.

As his bodily health improved, the doctor in attendance on him grew more and more anxious as to the state of his mind. There was no appearance of any positive derangement of intellect, but there was a mental depression, an unaltering, invincible prostration, produced by his absolute belief in the reality of the dreadful vision that he had seen at the masked ball, which suggested to the physician the gravest doubts about the case. He saw with dismay that the patient showed no anxiety, as he got stronger, except on one subject. He was eagerly desirous of seeing Nanina every day by his bedside; but, as soon as he was assured that his wish should be faithfully complied with, he seemed to care for nothing more. Even when they proposed, in the hope of rousing him to an exhibition of something like pleasure, that the girl should read to him for an hour every day out of one of his favorite books, he only showed a languid satisfaction. Weeks passed away, and still, do what they would, they could not make him so much as smile.

One day Nanina had begun to read to him as usual, but had not proceeded far before Marta Angrisani informed her that he had fallen into a doze. She ceased with a sigh, and sat looking at him sadly, as he lay near her, faint and pale and mournful in his sleep, miserably altered from what he was when she first knew him. It had been a hard trial to watch by his bedside in the terrible time of his delirium; but it was a harder trial still to look at him now, and to feel less and less hopeful with each succeeding day.

While her eyes and thoughts were still compassionately fixed on him, the door of the bed-room opened, and the doctor came in, followed by Andrea d'Arbino, whose share in the strange adventure with the Yellow Mask caused him to feel a special interest in Fabio's progress toward recovery.

"Asleep, I see, and sighing in his sleep," said the doctor, going to the bedside. "The grand difficulty with him," he continued, turning to D'Arbino, "remains precisely what it was. I have hardly left a single means untried of rousing him from that fatal depression; yet, for the last fortnight, he has not advanced a single step. It is impossible to shake his conviction of the reality of that face which he saw (or rather which he thinks he saw) when the yellow mask was removed; and, as long as he persists in his own shocking view of the case, so long will he lie there, getting better, no doubt, as to his body, but worse as to his mind."

"I suppose, poor fellow, he is not in a fit state to be reasoned with?"

"On the contrary, like all men with a fixed delusion, he has plenty of intelligence to appeal to on every point, except the one point on which he is wrong. I have argued with him vainly by the hour together. He possesses, unfortunately, an acute nervous sensibility and a vivid imagination; and, besides, he has, as I suspect, been superstitiously brought up as a child. It would be probably useless to argue rationally with him on certain spiritual subjects, even if his mind was in perfect health. He has a good deal of the mystic and the dreamer in his composition; and science and logic are but broken reeds to depend upon with men of that kind."

"Does he merely listen to you when you reason with him, or does he attempt to answer?"

"He has only one form of answer, and that is, unfortunately, the most difficult of all to dispose of. Whenever I try to convince him of his delusion, he invariably retorts by asking me for a rational explanation of what happened to him at the masked ball. Now, neither you nor I, though we believe firmly that he has been the dupe of some infamous conspiracy, has been able as yet to penetrate thoroughly into this mystery of the Yellow Mask. One common sense tells us that he must be wrong in taking his view of it, and that we must be right in taking ours; but if we can not give him actual, tangible proof of that; if we can only theorize when he asks us for an explanation—it is but too plain, in his present condition, that every time we remonstrate with him on the subject we only fix him in his delusion more and more firmly."

"It is not for want of perseverance on my part," said D'Arbino, after a moment of silence, "that we are still left in the dark. Ever since the extraordinary statement of the coachman who drove the woman home, I have been inquiring and investigating. I have offered the reward of two hundred scudi for the discovery of her; I have myself examined the servants at the palace, the night watchman at the Campo Santo, the police books, the lists of keepers of hotels and lodging houses, to hit on some trace of this woman; and I have failed in all directions. If my poor friend's perfect recovery does indeed depend on his delusion being combated by actual proof, I fear we have but little chance of restoring him. So far as I am concerned, I confess myself at the end of my resources."

"I hope we are not quite conquered yet," returned the doctor. "The proofs we want may turn up when we least expect them. It is certainly a miserable case," he continued, mechanically laying his fingers on the sleeping man's pulse. "There he lies, wanting nothing now but to recover the natural elasticity of his mind; and here we stand at his bedside, unable to relieve him of the weight that is pressing his faculties down. I repeat it, Signor Andrea, nothing will rouse him from his delusion that he is the victim of a supernatural interposition, but the production of some startling, practical proof of his error. At present he is in the position of a man who has been imprisoned from his birth in a dark room, and who denies the existence of daylight. If we can not open the shutters and show him the sky outside, we shall never convert him to a knowledge of the truth."

Saying these words, the doctor turned to lead the way out of the room, and observed Nanina, who had moved from the bedside on his entrance, standing near the door. He stooped to look at her, shook his head good-humoredly, and called to Marta, who happened to be occupied in an adjoining room.

"Signora Marta," said the doctor, "I think you told me some time ago that your pretty and careful little assistant lives in your house. Pray, does she take much walking exercise?"

"Very little, Signor Dottore. She goes home to her sister when she leaves the palace. Very little walking exercise indeed."

"I thought so! Her pale cheeks and heavy eyes told me as much. 'Now, my dear,' said the doctor, addressing Nanina, "you are a very good girl, and I am sure you will attend to what I tell you. Go out every morning before you come here, and take a walk in the fresh air. You are too young not to suffer by being shut up in close rooms every day, unless you get some regular exercise. Take a good long walk in the morning, or you will fall into my hands as a patient, and be quite unfit to continue your attendance here. Now, Signor Andrea, I am ready for you. Mind, my child, a walk every day in the open air outside the town, or you will fall ill, take my word for it!"

Nanina promised compliance; but she spoke rather absently, and seemed scarcely conscious of the kind familiarity which marked the doctor's manner. The truth was, that all her thoughts were occupied with what he had been saying by Fabio's bedside. She had not lost one word of the conversation while the doctor was talking of his patient, and of the conditions on which his recovery depended. "Oh, if that proof which would cure him could be found!" she thought to herself, as she stole back anxiously to the bedside when the room was empty.

On getting home that day she found a letter waiting for her, and was greatly surprised to see that it was written by no less a person than the master sculptor, Luca Lomi. It was very short; simply informing her that he had just returned to Pisa, and that he was anxious to know when she could sit to him for a new bust—a commission from a rich foreigner at Naples.

Nanina debated with herself for a moment whether she should answer the letter in the hardest way; to her, by writing, or in the easiest way, in person; and decided on going to the studio and telling the master sculptor that it would be impossible for her to serve him as a model, at least for some time to come. It would have taken her a long hour to say this with due propriety on paper; it would only take her a few minutes to say it with her own lips. So she put on her mantilla again, and departed for the studio.

On arriving at the gate and ringing the bell, a thought suddenly occurred to her, which she wondered had not struck her before. Was it not possible that she might meet Father Rocco in his brother's work-room? It was too late to retreat now, but not too late to ask, before she entered, if the priest was in the studio. Accordingly, when one of the workmen opened the door to her, she inquired first, very confusedly and anxiously, for Father Rocco. Hearing that he was not with his brother then, she went tranquilly enough to make her apologies to the master sculptor.

She did not think it necessary to tell him more than that she was now occupied every day by nursing duties in a sick-room, and that it was consequently out of her power to attend at the studio. Luca Lomi expressed, and evidently felt, great disappointment at her failing him as a model, and tried hard to persuade her that she might find time enough, if she chose, to sit to him as well as to nurse the sick person. The more she resisted his arguments and entreaties, the more obstinately he reiterated them. He was dusting his favorite busts and statues, after his long absence, with a feather brush when she came in; and he continued the occupation all the while he was talking—urging a fresh plea to induce Nanina to reconsider her refusal to sit at every fresh piece of sculpture he came to, and always receiving the same resolute apology from her as she slowly followed him down the studio toward the door.

Arriving thus at the lower end of the room, Luca stopped with a fresh argument on his lips before his statue of Minerva. He had dusted it already, but he lovingly returned to dust it again. It was a favorite work—the only good likeness (although it did assume to represent a classical subject) of his dead daughter that he possessed. He had refused to part with it for Maddalena's sake; and, as he now approached it with his brush for the second time, he absently ceased speaking, and mounted on a stool to look at the face near and blow the specks of dust off the forehead. Nanina thought this a good opportunity of escaping from further importunities. She was on the point of slipping away to the door with a word of farewell, when a sudden expression from Luca Lomi arrested her.

"Plaster!" cried the master-sculptor, looking intently at that part of the hair of the statue which lay lowest on the forehead. "Plaster here!" He took out his penknife as he spoke, and removed a tiny morsel of some white substance from an interstice between two folds of the hair where it touched the face. "It is plaster!" he exclaimed excitedly. "Somebody has been taking a cast from the face of my statue!"

He jumped off the stool, and looked all round the studio with an expression of suspicious inquiry. "I must have this cleared up," he said; "My statues were left under Rocco's care, and he is answerable if there has been any stealing of casts from any one of them. I must question him directly."

Nanina, seeing that he took no notice of her, felt that she might now easily effect her retreat. She opened the studio door, and repeated, for the twentieth time at least, that she was sorry she could not sit to him.

"I am sorry too, child," he said, irritably looking about for his hat. He found it apparently just as Nanina was going out; for she heard him call to one the workmen in the inner studio, and order the man say, if anybody wanted him, that he had gone to Father Rocco's lodgings.

CHAPTER VI.

The next morning when Nanina arose a bad attack of headache and a sense of languor and depression reminded her of the necessity of following the doctor's advice, and preserving her health by getting a little fresh air and exercise. She had more than two hours to spare before the usual time when her daily attendance began at the Ascoli palace, and she determined to employ the interval of leisure in taking a morning walk outside the town. La Bioudella would have been glad enough to go too, but she had a large order for dinner mats on hand, and was obliged for that day to stop in the house and work. Thus it happened that when Nanina set forth from her home the learned poodle, Scaramuccia, was her only companion.

She took the nearest way out of the town; the dog trotting along in his steady, observant way close at her side, pushing his great rough muzzle from time to time affectionately into her hand, and trying hard to attract her attention at intervals by barking and capering in front of her. He got but little notice, however, for his pains. Nanina was thinking again of all that the physician had said the day before by Fabio's bedside; and these thoughts brought with them others, equally absorbing, that were connected with the mysterious story of the young nobleman's adventure with the Yellow Mask. Thus preoccupied, she had little attention left for the gambols of the dog. Even the

THE OTHER SIDE.

"If any among ye be without sin, let him cast the first stone."

I know there's a harp lying low by the river,
Its sweet beauty dimmed by a Magdalen's tears;
She kneels there in sorrow, her frail arms extended;
She pleads but in vain, they turn a deaf ear—
She is pleading to tell them the sorrowful story
Of a pure, perfect love, that knew nothing of sin;
A love that might have been any man's glory
She shyly and tenderly lavished on him.

But her sisters pass by her, they scorn her sad story;
The harp lying dark by the waters of sin,
May lie there forever, they will not restore it,
Nor make her dark life what it once would have been
Had not the base tempter, with sinister cunning,
And vile hellish arts, by pure (!) women upheld,
Stole into her Eden and plucked the bright jewel,
Leaving her to her sorrow, whatever befel.

But listen, from whence come those sweet strains of music?
The vibrating air wafts low where she lies;
Her tear-bedimmed face she uplifts to the moonlight,
With one pale, slender hand she shades her dark eyes;
She looks in on a scene that fills her with hatred,
She sees her seducer, the cause of her sin,
The center of honor, all eager to hear him,
While wide through the land the earthly harps ring.

Christian mothers smile on him, they bring their young daughters;
In honor they place them upon his right hand,
While she, the poor victim, left alone in her sorrow,
Do you wonder a demon 's let loose in the land?
Then let us remember the words of our Savior,
Nor scorn her who sits where the dark waters glide.
The sweet harp of heaven shall not ring its full numbers,
Till redeemed, in her whiteness, she stands by His side.

THE YELLOW MASK.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

PART THIRD.

"The Yellow Mask!" whispered the waiting-girls nervously, crowding together behind the table. "The Yellow Mask again!"

"Make her speak!"

"Ask her to have something!"

"This gentleman will ask her. Speak to her, sir. Do speak to her! She glides about in that fearful yellow dress like a ghost."

Fabio looked around mechanically at the girl who was whispering to him. He saw at the same time that Nanina still kept her head turned away, and that she had her handkerchief at her eyes. She was evidently struggling yet with the agitation produced by their unexpected meeting, and was, most probably for that reason, the only person in the room not conscious of the presence of the Yellow Mask.

"Speak to her, sir. Do speak to her!" whispered two of the waiting-girls together.

Fabio turned again toward the table. The black eyes were still gleaming at him from behind the tawny yellow of the mask. He nodded to the girls who had just spoken, cast one farewell look at Nanina, and moved down the room to get round to the side of the table at which the Yellow Mask was standing. Step by step as he moved the bright eyes followed him. Steadily and more steadily their evil light seemed to shine through and through him, as he turned the corner of the table, and approached the still, spectral figure.

He came close up to the woman, but she never moved; her eyes never wavered for an instant. He stopped and tried to speak; but the chill struck through him again. An overpowering dread, an unutterable loathing seized on him; all sense of outer things—the whispering of the waiting-girls behind the table, the gentle cadence of the dance-music, the distant hum of joyous talk—suddenly left him. He turned away shuddering, and quitted the room.

Following the sound of the music, and desiring before all things now to join the crowd wherever it was largest, he was stopped in one of the smaller apartments by a gentleman who had just risen from the card-table, and who held out his hand with the cordiality of an old friend.

"Welcome back to the world, Count Fabio!" he began gayly, then suddenly checked himself. "Why, you look pale, and your hand feels cold. Not ill, I hope?"

"No, no. I have been rather startled—I can't say why—by a very strangely dressed woman, who fairly stared me out of countenance."

"You don't mean the Yellow Mask?"

"Yes, I do. Have you seen her?"

"Everybody has seen her; but nobody can make her unmask, or get her to speak. Our host has not the slightest notion who she is; and our hostess is horribly frightened at her. For my part, I think she has given us quite enough of her mystery and her grim dress; and if my name, instead of being nothing but plain Andrea d'Arbino, was Marquis Melani, I would say to her 'Madam, we are here to laugh and amuse ourselves; suppose you open your lips, and charm us by appearing in a prettier dress!'"

During this conversation they had sat down together, with their backs toward the door, by the side of one of the card-tables. While D'Arbino was speaking, Fabio suddenly felt himself shuddering again, and became conscious of a sound of low breathing behind him.

He turned round instantly, and there, standing between them, and peering down at them, was the Yellow Mask!

Fabio started up, and his friend followed his example. Again the gleaming black eyes rested steadily on the young nobleman's face, and again their look chilled him to the heart.

"Yellow Lady, do you know my friend?" exclaimed D'Arbino, with mock solemnity.

There was no answer. The fatal eyes never moved from Fabio's face.

"Yellow Lady," continued the other, "listen to the music. Will you dance with me?"

The eyes looked away, and the figure glided slowly from the room.

"My dear Count," said D'Arbine, "that woman seems to have quite an effect on you. I declare she has left you paler than ever. Come into the supper-room with me, and have some wine; you really look as if you wanted it."

They went at once to the large refreshment-room. Nearly all the guests had by this time begun to dance again. They had the whole apartment, therefore, almost entirely to themselves.

Among the decorations of the room, which were not strictly in accordance with genuine Arcadian simplicity, was a large looking-glass, placed over a well-furnished sideboard. D'Arbino led Fabio in this direction, exchanging greetings as he advanced with a gentleman who stood near the glass looking into it, and carelessly fanning himself with his mask.

"My dear friend!" cried D'Arbino, "you are the very man to lead us straight to the best bottle of wine in the palace. Count Fabio, let me present to you my intimate and good friend, the Cavaliere Finello, with whose family I know you are well acquainted. Finello, the Count is a little out of spirits, and I have prescribed a good dose of wine. I see a whole row of bottles at your side, and I leave it to you to apply the remedy. Glasses there! three glasses, my lovely shepherdess with the black eyes—the three largest you have got."

The glasses were brought; the Cavaliere Finello chose a particular bottle, and filled them. All three gentlemen turned round to the sideboard to use it as a table, and thus necessarily faced the looking-glass.

"Now let us drink the toast of toasts," said D'Arbino. "Finello, Count Fabio—the ladies of Pisa!"

Fabio raised the wine to his lips, and was on the point of drinking it, when he saw reflected in the glass the figure of the Yellow Mask. The glittering eyes were again fixed on him, and the yellow-hooded head bowed slowly, as if in acknowledgment of the toast he was about to drink. For the third time the strange chill seized him, and he set down his glass of wine untasted.

"Have you any dislike, Count, to that particular wine?" inquired the Cavaliere.

"The Yellow Mask!" whispered Fabio. "The Yellow Mask again!"

They all three turned round directly toward the door. But it was too late—the figure had disappeared.

"Does any one know who this Yellow Mask is?" asked Finello. "One may guess by the walk that the figure is a woman's. Perhaps it may be the strange color she has chosen for her dress, or perhaps her stealthy way of moving from room to room; but there is certainly something mysterious and startling about her."

"Startling enough, as the Count would tell you," said D'Arbino. "The Yellow Mask has been responsible for his loss of spirits and change of complexion, and now she has prevented him even from drinking his wine."

"I can't account for it," said Fabio, looking round him uneasily; "but this is the third room into which she has followed me—the third time she has seemed to fix her eyes on me alone. I suppose my nerves are hardly in a fit state yet for masked balls and adventures; the sight of her seems to chill me. Who can she be?"

"If she followed me a fourth time," said Finello, "I should insist on her unmasking."

"And suppose she refused?" asked his friend.

"Then I should take her mask off for her."

"It is impossible to do that with a woman," said Fabio. "I prefer trying to lose her in the crowd. Excuse me, gentlemen, if I leave you to finish the wine, and then to meet me, if you like, in the great ball-room."

He retired as he spoke, put on his mask, and joined the dancers immediately, taking care to keep always in the most crowded corner of the apartment. For some time this plan of action proved successful, and he saw no more of the mysterious yellow domino. Ere long, however, some new dances were arranged, in which the great majority of the persons in the ball-room took part; the figures resembling the old English country dances in this respect, that the ladies and gentlemen were placed in long rows opposite to each other. The sets consisted of about twenty couples each, placed sometimes across, and sometimes along the apartment; and the spectators were all required to move away on either side, and range themselves close to the walls. As Fabio among others complied with this necessity, he looked down a row of dancers waiting during the performance of the orchestral prelude; and there, watching him again, from the opposite end of the lane formed by the gentlemen on one side and the ladies on the other, he saw the Yellow Mask.

He moved abruptly back toward another row of dancers, placed at right angles to the first row; and there again, at the opposite end of the gay lane of brightly-dressed figures, was the Yellow Mask. He slipped into the middle of the room, but it was only to find her occupying his former position near the wall, and still, in spite of his disguise, watching him through row after row of dancers. The persecution began to grow intolerable; he felt a kind of angry curiosity mingling now with the vague dread that had hitherto oppressed him. Finello's advice recurred to his memory; and he determined to make the woman unmask at all hazards. With this intention he returned to the supper-room in which he had left his friends.

They were gone, probably to the ball-room to look for him. Plenty of wine was still left on the sideboard, and he poured himself out a glass. Finding that his hand trembled as he did so, he drank several more glasses in quick succession, to nerve himself for the approaching encounter with the Yellow Mask. While he was drinking he expected every moment to see her in the looking-glass again; but she never appeared—and yet he felt almost certain that he had detected her gliding out out after him when he left the ball-room.

He thought it possible that she might be waiting for him in one of the smaller apartments, and, taking off his mask, walked through several of them without meeting her, until he came to the door of the refreshment-room in which Nanina and he had recognized each other. The waiting-woman behind the table, who had first spoken to him, caught sight of him now, and ran round to the door.

"Don't come in and speak to Nanina again," she said, mistaking the purpose which had brought him to the door. "What with frightening her first, and making her cry afterward, you have rendered her quite unfit for her work. The steward is in there at this moment, very good-natured, but not very sober. He says she is pale and red-eyed, and not fit to be a shepherdess any longer, and that, as she will not be missed now, she may go home if she likes. We have got her an old cloak, and she is going to try and slip through the rooms unobserved, to get down stairs and change her dress. Don't speak to her, pray, or you will only make her cry again; and what is worse, make the steward fancy—"

She stopped at that last word, and pointed suddenly over Fabio's shoulder.

"The Yellow Mask!" she exclaimed. "Oh, sir, draw her away into the ball-room, and give Nanina a change of getting out!"

Fabio turned directly, and approached the Mask, who, as they looked at each other, slowly retreated before him. The waiting-woman, seeing the yellow figure retire, hastened back to Namina in the refreshment-room.

Slowly the masked woman retreated from one apartment to another till she entered a corridor brilliantly lit up and beautifully ornamented with flowers. On the right hand this corridor led to the ball-room; on the left to an antechamber at the head of the palace staircase. The Yellow Mask went on a few paces toward the left, then stopped. The bright eyes fixed themselves as before on Fabio's face, but only for a moment. He heard a light step behind him, and then he saw the eyes move. Following the direction they took, he turned round, and discovered Nanina, wrapped up in the old cloak which was to enable her to get down stairs unobserved.

"Oh, how can I get out? how can I get out?" cried the girl, shrinking back affrightedly as she saw the Yellow Mask.

"That way," said Fabio, pointing in the direction of the ball-room. "Nobody will notice you in the cloak; it will only be thought some new disguise." He took her arm as she spoke, to reassure her, and continued in a whisper, "Don't forget to-morrow."

At the same moment he felt a hand laid on him. It was the hand of the masked woman, and it put him back from Nanina.

In spite of himself, he trembled at her touch, but still retained presence of mind enough to sign to the girl to make her escape. With a look of eager inquiry in the direction of the Mask, and a half suppressed exclamation of terror, she obeyed him, and hastened away toward the ball-room.

"We are alone," said Fabio, confronting the gleaming black eyes, and reaching out his hand resolutely toward the Yellow Mask. "Tell me who you are, and why you follow me, or I will uncover your face, and solve the mystery for myself."

The woman pushed his hand aside, and drew back a few paces, but never spoke a word. He followed her. There was not an instant to be lost, for just then the sound of footsteps hastily approaching the corrider became audible.

"Now or never," he whispered to himself, and snatched at the mask.

His arm was again thrust aside; but this time the woman raised her disengaged hand at the same moment, and removed the yellow mask.

The lamps shed their soft light full on her face.

It was the face of his dead wife.

CHAPTER IV.

Signor Andrea d'Arbino, searching vainly through the various rooms in the palace for Count Fabio d'Ascoli, and trying, as a last resource, the corrider leading to the ball-room and grand stair-case, discovered his friend lying on the floor in a swoon, without any living creature near him. Determining to avoid alarming the guests if possible, D'Arbino first sought help in the antechamber. He found there the Marquis's valet, assisting the Cavaliere Finello (who was just taking his departure) to put on his cloak.

While Finello and his friend carried Fabio to an open window in the antechamber, the valet procured some iced water. This simple remedy, and the change of atmosphere, proved enough to restore the fainting man to his senses, but hardly—as it seemed to his friends—to his former self. They noticed a change to blankness and stillness in his face, and when he spoke an indescribable alteration in the tone of his voice.

"I found you in a room in the corridor," said D'Arbino. "What made you faint? Don't you remember? Was it the heat?"

Fabio waited for a moment, painfully collecting his ideas. He looked at the valet, and Finello signed to the man to withdraw.

"Was it the heat?" repeated D'Arbino.

"No," answered Fabio, in strangely hushed steady tones. "I have seen the face that was behind the yellow mask."

"Well?"

"It was the face of my dead wife."

"Your dead wife!"

"When the mask was removed I saw her face. Not as I remember it in the pride of her youth and beauty—not even as I remember her on her sick-bed—but as I remember her in her coffin."

"Count! for God's sake, rouse yourself! Collect your thoughts—remember where you are—and free your mind of its horrible delusion."

"Spare me all remonstrances; I am not fit to bear them. My life has only one object now—the punishing of this mystery to the end. Will you help me? I am scarcely fit to act for myself."

He still spoke in the same unnaturally hushed, deliberate tones. D'Arbino and Finello exchanged glances behind him as he rose from the sofa on which he had hitherto been lying.

"We will help you in everything," said D'Arbino soothingly. "Trust in us to the end. What do you wish to do first?"

"The figure must have gone through this room. Let us descend the staircase and ask the servants if they have seen it pass."

(Both D'Arbino and Finello remarked that he did not say her.)

They inquired down to the very courtyard. Not one of the servants had seen the Yellow Mask.

The last resource was the porter at the outer gate. They applied to him; and in answer to their questions he asserted that he had most certainly seen a lady in a yellow domino and mask drive away, about half an hour before, in a hired coach.

"Should you remember the coachman again?" asked D'Arbino.

"Perfectly; he is an old friend of mine."

"And you know where he lives?"

"Yes; as well as I know where I do."

"Any reward you like, if you can get somebody to mind your lodge, and can take us to that house."

In a few minutes they were following the porter through the dark, silent streets. "We had better try the stables first," said the man. "My friend the coachman will hardly have had time to do more than set the lady down. We shall most likely catch him just putting up his horses."

The porter turned out to be right. On entering the stable-yard, they found that the empty coach had just driven into it.

"You have been taking home a lady in a yellow domino from the masquerade?" said D'Arbino, putting some money into the coachman's hand.

"Yes, sir; I was engaged by that lady for the evening—engaged to drive her to the ball as well as to drive her home."

"Where did you take her from?"

"From a very extraordinary place—from the gate of the Campo Santo burial-ground."

During this colloquy Finello and D'Arbino had been standing with Fabio between them, each giving him an arm. The instant the last answer was given, he reeled back with a cry of horror.

"Where have you taken her to now?" asked D'Arbino. He looked about him nervously as he put the question, and spoke for the first time in a whisper.

"To the Campo Santo again," said the coachman.

Fabio suddenly drew his arms out of the arms of his friends, and sank to his knees on the ground, hiding his face. From some broken ejaculations which escaped him, it seemed as if he dreaded that his senses were leaving him, and that he was praying to be preserved in his right mind.

"Why is he so vilently agitated?" said Finello eagerly to his friend.

"Hush!" returned the other. "You heard him say that when he saw the face behind the yellow mask, it was the face of his dead wife?"

"Yes. But what then?"

"His wife was buried in the Campo Santo."

CHAPTER V.

Of all the persons who had been present, in any capacity, at the Marquis Melani's ball, the earliest riser on the morning after it was Nanina. The agitation produced by the strange events in which she had been concerned destroyed the very idea of sleep. Through the hours of darkness she could not even close her eyes; and, as soon as the new day broke, she rose to breathe the early morning air at her window, and to think in perfect tranquillity over all that had passed since she entered the Melani Palace to wait on the guests at the masquerade.

On reaching home the previous night, all her other sensations had been absorbed in a vague feeling of mingled dread and curiosity, produced by the sight of the weird figure in the yellow mask, which she had left standing alone with Fabio in the palace corridor. The morning light, however, suggested new thoughts. She now opened the note which the young nobleman had pressed into her hand, and read over and over again the hurried pencil lines scrawled on the paper. Could there be any harm, any forgetfulness of her own duty, in using the key inclosed in the note, and keeping her appointment in the Ascoli gardens at ten o'clock? Surely not—surely the last sentence he had written, "Believe in my truth and honor, Nanina, for I believe implicitly in yours," was enough to satisfy her this time that she could not be doing wrong in listening for once to the pleading of her own heart. And besides, there in her lap lay the key of the wicket-gate. It was absolutely necessary to use that, if only for the purpose of giving it back safely into the hand of its owner.

As this last thought was passing through her mind, and plausibly overcoming any faint doubts and difficulties which she might still have left, she was startled by a sudden knocking at the street door; and, looking out of the window immediately, saw a man in livery standing in the street, anxiously peering up at the house to see if his knocking had aroused anybody.

"Does Marta Angrisani, the sick-nurse, live here?" inquired the man, as soon as Nanina showed herself at the window.

"Yes," she answered. "Must I call her up? Is there some person ill?"

"Call her up directly," said the servant; "she is wanted at the Ascoli Palace. My master, Count Fabio—"

Nanina waited to hear no more. She flew to the room in which the sick-nurse slept, and awoke her, almost roughly, in an instant.

"He is ill!" she cried breathlessly. "Oh, make haste, make haste! He is ill, and he has sent for you!"

Marta inquired who had sent for her, and on being informed, promised to lose no time. Nanina ran down stairs to tell the servant that the sick-nurse was getting on her clothes. The man's serious expression, when she came close to him, terrified her. All her usual self-distrust vanished; and she entreated him, without attempting to conceal her anxiety, to tell her particularly what his master's illness was, and how it had affected him so suddenly after the ball.

"I know nothing about it," answered the man, noticing Nanina's manner as she put her question with some surprise, "except that my master was brought home by two gentlemen, friends of his, about a couple of hours ago, in a very sad state—half out of his mind, as it seemed to me. I gathered from what was said that he had got a dreadful shock from seeing some woman take off her mask, and show her face to him at the ball. How that could be I don't in the least understand; but I know that when the doctor was sent for, he looked very serious, and talked about fearing brain-fever."

Here the servant stopped; for, to his astonishment, he saw Nanina suddenly turn away from him, and then heard her crying bitterly as she went back into the house.

Marta Angrisani had huddled on her clothes, and was looking at herself in the glass to see that she was sufficiently presentable to appear at the palace, when she felt two arms flung round her neck; and, before she could say a word, found Nanina sobbing on her bosom.

"He is ill—he is in danger!" cried the girl. "I must go with you to help him. You have always been kind to me, Marta—be kinder than ever now. Take me with you—take me with you to the palace!"

"You, child!" exclaimed the nurse, gently unclasping her arms.

"Yes—yes! if it is only for an hour," pleaded Nanina—"if it is only for one little hour every day. You have only to say that I am your helper, and they would let me in. Marta! I shall break my heart if I can't see him, and help him to get well again."

The nurse still hesitated. Nanina clasped her round the neck once more, and laid her cheek—burning-hot now, though the tears had been streaming down it but an instant before—close to the good woman's face.

"I love him, Marta; great as he is, I love him with all my heart and soul and strength," she went on, in quick, eager, whispering tones; "and he loves me. He would have married me, if I had not gone away to save him from it. I could keep my love for him a secret while he was well; I could stifle it, and crush it down, and wither it up by absence. But now he is ill, it gets beyond me; I can't master it. Oh, Marta! don't break my heart by denying me! I have suffered so much for his sake, that I have earned the right to nurse him!"

Marta was not proof against this last appeal. She had one great and rare merit for a middle-aged woman—she had not forgotten her own youth.

"Come, child," said she soothingly; "I won't attempt to deny you. Dry your eyse, put on your mantilla; and, when we get face to face with the doctor, try to look as old and ugly as you can, if you want to be let into the sick-room alone with me."

The ordeal of medical scrutiny was passed more easily than Marta Angrisani had anticipated. It was of great importance, in the doctor's opinion, that the sick man should see familiar faces at his bedside. Nanina had only, therefore, to state that he knew her well, and that she had sat to him as a model in the days when he was learning the art of sculpture, to be immediately accepted as Marta's privileged assistant in the sick-room.

The worst apprehensions felt by the doctor for the patient were soon realized. The fever flew to his brain. For nearly six weeks he lay prostrate, at the merey of death; now raging with the wild strength of delirium, and now sunk in the speechless, motionless sleepless exhaustion which was his only repose. At last the blessed day came when he enjoyed his first sleep, and when the doctor began, for the first time, to talk of the future with hope. Even then, however, the same terrible peculiarity marked his light dreams which had previously shown itself in his fierce delirium. From the faintly uttered, broken phrases which dropped from him when he slept, as from the wild words which burst from him when his senses were deranged, the one sad discovery inevitably resulted, that his mind was still haunted, day and night, hour after hour, by the figure in the yellow mask.

As his bodily health improved, the doctor in attendance on him grew more and more anxious as to the state of his mind. There was no appearance of any positive derangement of intellect, but there was a mental depression, an unaltering, invincible prostration, produced by his absolute belief in the reality of the dreadful vision that he had seen at the masked ball, which suggested to the physician the gravest doubts about the case. He saw with dismay that the patient showed no anxiety, as he got stronger, except on one subject. He was eagerly desirous of seeing Nanina every day by his bedside; but, as soon as he was assured that his wish should be faithfully complied with, he seemed to care for nothing more. Even when they proposed, in the hope of rousing him to an exhibition of something like pleasure, that the girl should read to him for an hour every day out of one of his favorite books, he only showed a languid satisfaction. Weeks passed away, and still, do what they would, they could not make him so much as smile.

One day Nanina had begun to read to him as usual, but had not proceeded far before Marta Angrisani informed her that he had fallen into a doze. She ceased with a sigh, and sat looking at him sadly, as he lay near her, faint and pale and mournful in his sleep, miserably altered from what he was when she first knew him. It had been a hard trial to watch by his bedside in the terrible time of his delirium; but it was a harder trial still to look at him now, and to feel less and less hopeful with each succeeding day.

While her eyes and thoughts were still compassionately fixed on him, the door of the bed-room opened, and the doctor came in, followed by Andrea d'Arbino, whose share in the strange adventure with the Yellow Mask caused him to feel a special interest in Fabio's progress toward recovery.

"Asleep, I see, and sighing in his sleep," said the doctor, going to the bedside. "The grand difficulty with him," he continued, turning to D'Arbino, "remains precisely what it was. I have hardly left a single means untried of rousing him from that fatal depression; yet, for the last fortnight, he has not advanced a single step. It is impossible to shake his conviction of the reality of that face which he saw (or rather which he thinks he saw) when the yellow mask was removed; and, as long as he persists in his own shocking view of the case, os long will he lie there, getting better, no doubt, as to his body, but worse as to his mind."

"I suppose, poor fellow, he is not in a fit state to be reasoned with?"

"On the contrary, like all men with a fixed delusion, he has plenty of intelligence to appeal to on every point, except the one point on which he is wrong. I have argued with him vainly by the hour together. He possesses, unfortunately, an acute nervous sensibility and a vivid imagination; and, besides, he has, as I suspect, been superstitiously brought up as a child. It would be probably useless to argue rationally with him on certain spiritual subjects, even if his mind was in perfect health. He has a good deal of the mystic and the dreamer in his composition; and science and logic are but broken reeds to depend upon with men of that kind."

"Does he merely listen to you when you reason with him, or does he attempt to answer?"

"He has only one form of answer, and that is, unfortunately, the most difficult of all to dispose of. Whenever I try to convince him of his delusion, he invariably retorts by asking me for a rational explanation of what happened to him at the masked ball. Now, neither you nor I, though we believe firmly that he has been the dupe of some infamous conspiracy, has been able as yet to penetrate thoroughly into this mystery of the Yellow Mask. Our common sense tells us that he must be wrong in taking his view of it, and that we must be right in taking ours; but if we can not give him actual, tangible proof of that; if we can only theorize when he asks us for an explanation—it is but too plain, in his present condition, that every time we remonstrate with him on the subject we only fix him in his delusion more and more firmly."

"It is not for want of perseverance on my part," said D'Arbino, after a moment of silence, "that we are still left in the dark. Ever since the extraordinary statement of the coachman who drove the woman home, I have been inquiring and investigating. I have offered the reward of two hundred scudi for the discovery of her; I have myself examined the servants at the palace, the night watchman at the Campo Santo, the police books, the lists of keepers of hotels and lodging houses, to hit on some trace of this woman; and I have failed in all directions. If my poor friend's perfect recovery does indeed depend on his delusion being combateed by actual proof, I fear we have but little chance of restoring him. So far as I am concerned, I confess myself at the end of my resources."

"I hope we are not quite conquered yet," returned the doctor. "The proofs we want may turn up when we least expect them. It is certainly a miserable case," he continued, mechanically laying his fingers on the sleeping man's pulse. "There he lies, wanting nothing now but to recover the natural elasticity of his mind; and here we stand at his bedside, unable to relieve him of the weight that is pressing his faculties down. I repeat it, Signor Andrea, nothing will rouse him from his delusion that he is the victim of a supernatural interposition, but the production of some startling, practical proof of his error. At present he is in the position of a man who has been imprisoned from his birth in a dark room, and who denies the existence of daylight. If we can not open the shutters and show him the sky outside, we shall never convert him to a knowledge of the truth."

Saying these words, the doctor turned to lead the way out of the room, and observed Nanina, who had moved from the bedside on his entrance, standing near the door. He stooped to look at her, shook his head good-humoredly, and called to Marta, who happened to be occupied in an adjoining room.

"Signora Marta," said the doctor, "I think you told me some time ago that your pretty and careful little assistant lives in your house. Pray, does she take much walking exercise?"

"Very little, Signor Dottore. She goes home to her sister when she leaves the palace. Very little walking exercise indeed."

"I thought so! Her pale cheeks and heavy eyes told me as much. Now, my dear," said the doctor, addressing Nanina, "you are a very good girl, and I am sure you will attend to what I tell you. Go out every morning before you come here, and take a walk in the fresh air. You are too young not to suffer by being shut up in close rooms every day, unless you get some regular exercise. Take a good long walk in the morning, or you will fall into my hands as a patient, and be quite unfit to continue your attendance here. Now, Signor Andrea, I am ready for you. Mind, my child, a walk every day in the open air outside the town, or you will fall ill, take my word for it!"

Nanina promised compliance; but she spoke rather absently, and seemed scarcely conscious of the kind familiarity which marked the doctor's manner. The truth was, that all her thoughts were occupied with what he had been saying by Fabio's bedside. She had not lost one word of the conversation while the doctor was talking of his patient, and of the conditions on which his recovery depended. "Oh, if that proof which would cure him could be found!" she thought to herself, as she stole back anxiously to the bedside when the room was empty.

On getting home that day she found a letter waiting for her, and was greatly surprised to see that it was written by no less a person than the master sculptor, Luca Lomi. It was very short; simply informing her that he had just returned to Pisa, and that he was anxious to know when she could sit to him for a new bust—a commission from a rich foreigner at Naples.

Nanina debated with herself for a moment whether she should answer the letter in the hardest way, to her, by writing, or in the easiest way, in person; and decided on going to the studio and telling the master sculptor that it would be impossible for her to serve him as a model, at least for some time to come. It would have taken her a long hour to say this with due propriety on paper; it would only take her a few minutes to say it with her own lips. So she put on her mantilla again, and departed for the studio.

On arriving at the gate and ringing the bell, a thought suddenly occurred to her, which she wondered had not struck her before. Was it not possible that she might meet Father Rocco in his brother's work-room? It was too late to retreat now, but not too late to ask, before she entered, if the priest was in the studio. Accordingly, when one of the workmen opened the door to her, she inquired first, very confusedly and anxiously, for Father Rocco. Hearing that he was not with his brother then, she went tranquilly enough to make her apologies to the master sculptor.

She did not think it necessary to tell him more than that she was now occupied every day by nursing duties in a sick-room, and that it was consequently out of her power to attend at the studio. Luca Lomi expressed, and evidently felt, great disappointment at her failing him as a model, and tried hard to persuade her that she might find time enough, if she chose, to sit to him, as well as to nurse the sick person. The more she resisted his arguments and entreaties, the more obstinately he reiterated them. He was dusting his favorite busts and statues, after his long absence, with a feather brush when she came in; and he continued the occupation all the while he was talking—urging a fresh plea to induce Nanina to reconsider her refusal to sit at every fresh piece of sculpture he came to, and always receiving the same resolute apology from her as she slowly followed him down the studio toward the door.

Arriving thus at the lower end of the room, Luca stopped with a fresh argument on his lips before his statue of Minerva. He had dusted it already, but he lovingly returned to dust it again. It was a favorite work—the only good likeness (although it did assume to represent a classical subject) of his dead daughter that he possessed. He had refused to part with it for Maddalena's sake; and, as he now approached it with his brush for the second time, he absently ceasspeaking, and mounted on a stool to look at the face near and blow the specks of dust off the forehead. Nanina thought this a good opportunity of escaping from further importunities. She was on the point of slipping away to the door with a word of farewell, when a sudden expression from Luca Lomi arrested her.

"Plaster!" cried the master-sculptor, looking intently at that part of the hair of the statue which lay lowest on the forehead. "Plaster here!" He took out his penknife as he spoke, and removed a tiny morsel of some white substance from an interstice between two folds of the hair where it touched the face. "It is plaster!" he exclaimed excitedly. "Somebody has been taking a cast from the face of my statue!"

He jumped off the stool, and looked all round the studio with an expression of suspious inqury. "I must have this cleared up," he said, "My statues were left under Rocco's care, and he is answerable if there has been any stealing of casts from any one of them. I must question him directly."

Nanina, seeing that he took no notice of her, felt that she might now easily effect her retreat. She opened the studio door, and repeated, for the twentieth time at least, that she was sorry she could not sit to him.

"I am sorry too, child," he said, irritably looking about for his hat. He found it apparently just as Nanina was going out; for she heard him call to one the workmen in the inner studio, and order the man say, if anybody wanted him, that he had gono to Father Rocco's lodgings.

CHAPTER VI.

The next morning when Nanina arose a bad attack of headache and a sense of languor and depression reminded her of the necessity of following the doctor's advice, and preserving her health by getting a little fresh air and exercise. She had more than two hours to spare before the usual time when her daily attendance began at the Ascoli palace, and she determined to employ the interval of leisure in taking a morning walk outside the town. La Biondella would have been glad enough to go too, but she had a large order for dinner mats on hand, and was obliged for that day to stop in the house and work. Thus it happened that when Nanina set forth from her home the learned poodle, Scaramuccia, was her only companion.

She took the nearest way out of the town; the dog trotting along in his steady, observant way close at her side, pushing his great rough muzzle from time to time affectionately into her hand, and trying hard to attract her attention at intervals by barking and capering in front of her. He got but little notice, however, for his pains. Nanina was thinking again of all that the physician had said the day before by Fabio's bedside; and these thoughts brought with them others, equally absorbing, that were connected with the mysterious story of the young nobleman's acquaintance with the Yellow Mask. Thus preoccupied, she had little attention left for the gambols of the dog. Even the beauty of the morning appealed to her in vain. She felt the refreshment of the cool, fragrant air, but she hardly noticed the lovely blue of the sky, or the bright sunshine that gave a gayety and an interest to the commonest objects around her.

After walking nearly an hour she began to feel tired, and looked about for a shady place to rest in.

Beyond and behind her there was only the high-road and the flat country, but by her side stood a little wooden building, half inn, half coffee-house, backed by a large shady pleasure garden, the gates of which stood invitingly open. Some workmen in the garden were putting up a stage for fireworks, but the place was otherwise quiet and lonely enough. It was only used at night as a sort of rustic Ranelagh, to which the citizens of Pisa resorted for pure air and amusement after the fatigues of the day. Observing that there were no visitors in the grounds, Nanina ventured in, intending to take a quarter of an hour's rest in the coolest place she could find before returning to Pisa.

She had passed the back of a wooden summer-house in a secluded part of the gardens, when she suddenly missed the dog from her side, and, looking round after him, saw that he was standing behind the summer-house with his ears erect and his nose to the ground, having evidently that instant scented something that excited his suspicion.

Thinking it possible that he might be meditating an attack on some unfortunate cat, she turned to see what he was watching. The carpenters engaged on the firework stage were just then hammering at it violently. The noise prevented her from hearing that Scaramuccia was growling, but she could feel that he was the moment she laid her hand on his back. Her curiosity was excited, and she stooped down close to him, to look through a crack in the boards before which he stood in the summer-house.

She was startled at seeing a lady and gentleman sitting inside. The place she was looking through was not high enough up to enable her to see their faces, but she recognized, or thought she recognized, the pattern of the lady's dress as one which she had noticed in former days in the Demoiselle Grifondi's show-room. Rising quickly, her eye detected a hole in the boards about the level of her own height, caused by a knot having been forced out of the wood. She looked through it to ascertain, without being discovered, if the wearer of the familiar dress was the person she had taken her to be; and saw, not Brigada only, as she had expected, but Father Rocco as well. At the same moment the carpenters left off hammering and began to saw. The new sound from the firework stage was regular and not loud. The voices of the occupants of the summer-house reached her through it, and she heard Brigida pronounce the name of Count Fabio.

Instantly stooping down once more by the dog's side, she caught his muzzle firmly in both her hands. It was the only way to keep Scaramuccia from growling again, at a time when there was no din of hammering to prevent him from being heard. Those two words, "Count Fabio," in the mouth of another woman, excited a jealous anxiety in her. What could Brigida have to say in connection with that name? She never came near the Ascoli palace—what right or reason could she have to talk of Fabio?

"Did you hear what I said?" she heard Brigida ask, in her coolest, hardest tone.

"No," the priest answered. "At least, not all of it."

"I will repeat it, then. I asked what had so suddenly determined you to give up all idea of making any future experiments on the superstitious fears of Count Fabio?"

"In the first place, the result of the experiment already tried has been so much more serious than I had anticipated, that I believe the end I had in view in making it has been answered already."

"Well; that is your only reason?"

"Another shock to his mind might be fatal to him. I can use what I believe to be a justifiable fraud to prevent his marrying again; but I can not burden myself with a crime."

"That is your second reason; but I believe you have another yet. The suddenness with which you sent to me last night to appoint a meeting in this lonesome place; the emphatic manner in which you requested—I may say almost ordered—me to bring the wax mask here, suggest to my mind that something must have happened. What is it? I am a woman, and my curiosity must be satisfied. After the secrets you have trusted to me already, you need not hesitate, I think, to trust me with one more."

"Perhaps not. The secret this time is, moreover, of no great importance. You know that the wax mask you wore at the ball was made in a plaster mold taken off the face of my brother's statue?"

"Yes, I know that."

"My brother has just returned to his studio; has found a morsel of the plaster I used for the mold sticking in the hair of the statue, and has asked me, as the person left in charge of his work-rooms, for an explanation. Such an explanation as I could offer has not satisfied him, and he talks of making further inquiries. Considering that it will be used no more, I think it afeat to destroy the wax mask; and I asked you to bring it here, that I might see it burned or broken up with my own eyes. Now you know all you wanted to know; and now, therefore, it is my turn to remind you that I have not yet had a direct answer to the first question I addressed to you when we met here. Have you brought the wax mask with you, or have you not?"

"I have not."

"And why?"

Just as that question was put, Nanina felt the dog dragging himself free of her grasp on his mouth. She had been listening hitherto with such painful intensity, with such all-absorbing emotions of suspense, terror, and astonishment, that she had not noticed his efforts to get away, and had continued mechanically to hold his mouth shut. But now she was aroused by the violence of his struggles to the knowledge that, unless she hit upon some new means of quieting him, he would have his mouth free, and would betray her by a growl.

In an agony of apprehension lest she should lose a word of the momentous conversation, she made a desperate attempt to appeal to the dog's fondness for her by suddenly flinging both her arms round his neck, and kissing his rough, hairy cheek. The stratagem succeeded. Scaramuccia had, for many years past, never received any greater marks of his mistress's kindness for him than such as a pat on the head or a present of a lump of sugar might convey. His dog's nature was utterly confounded by the unexpected warmth of Nanina's caress, and he struggled up vigorously in her arms to try and return it by licking her face. She could easily prevent him from doing this, and could so gain a few minutes more to listen behind the summer-house without danger of discovery.

She had lost Brigida's answer to Father Rocco's question; but she was in time to hear her next words.

"We are alone here," said Brigida. "I am a woman, and I don't know that you may not have come armed. It is only the commonest precaution on the part not to give you a chance of getting at the wax mask till I have made my conditions."

"You never said a word about conditions before."

"True. I remember telling you that I wanted nothing but the novelty of going to the masquerade in the character of my dead enemy, and the luxury of being able to terrify the man who had brutally ridiculed me in old days in the studio. That was the truth. But it is not the less the truth that our experiment on Count Fabio has detained me in this city much longer than I ever intended, that I am all but penniless, and that I deserve to be paid. In plain words, will you buy the mask of me for two hundred scudi?"

"I have not twenty scudi in the world at my own free disposal."

"You must find two hundred if you want the wax mask. I don't wish to threaten, but money I must have. I mention the sum of two hundred scudi, because that is the exact amount offered in the public handbills by Count Fabio's friends for the discovery of the woman who wore the yellow mask at the Marquis Melani's ball. What have I to do but to earn that money, if I please, by going to the palace, taking the wax mask with me, and telling them that I am the woman. Suppose I confess in that way; they can do nothing to hurt me, and I should be two hundred scudi the richer. You might be injured, to be sure, if they insisted on knowing who made the wax model, and who suggested the ghastly disguise—"

"Wretch! do you believe that my character could be injured by the unsupported evidence of any words from your lips?"

Fanny Davenport's Marriage.

[Dramatic News.]

Scarcely had Miss Fanny Davenport and Mr. Edwin Price been made one flesh before the Dramatic News was showered upon with all sorts of notes and letters, and postal-cards protesting that "something ought to be done about it." Which, of course, was a circuitous way of requesting the Dramatic News to turn its double-shotted batteries on the happy bride and groom.

The Dramatic News, however, respectfully declines to do anything of the sort, and for the following reasons:

In the first place, Miss Davenport's private affairs are no concern whatever either of the Dramatic News or of its readers—so long as Miss Davenport does not make them public. Last week, when Miss Davenport had given no sign of her intention to marry Mr. Price, we protested that it was scandalous, under the circumstances, for Mr. Price to be Miss Davenport's companion and associate on the stage. Her marriage to him has removed that objection absolutely.

In the second place, Miss Davenport's marriage seems to have entirely and completely satisfied the only persons actually involved. At one time it looked as if Mrs. Katie Baker Price, Miss Davenport's immediate predecessor in Mr. Price's affections, really had a grievance. Her friends, who were never so numerous as they were on this occasion, protested that she was heartbroken, that she was dying, and her husband's infidelity had killed her. And it did look at one time as if the fate of Mrs. Price No. 1 was a hard one, beyond the reach of all consolation.

But we are glad to learn that the whole matter has been amicably adjusted all round. Mrs. Price No. 1 makes a complete and thorough conveyance and transfer of Mr. Price to Mrs. Price No. 2 on the following conditions:

Mr. Price is to pay Mrs. Price No. 1 the sum of $5,000 down and $25 a week, and Mrs. Price No. 1, on her part, withdraws all objections to his becoming the consort of Mrs. Price No. 2.

Of course, as Mrs. Price No. 1 thoroughly understands, the $5,000 paid down nominally by Mr. Price is really paid down by Miss Davenport, the Mrs. Price No. 2 of the complication. So that Mrs. Price No. 1, as a matter of fact, turns Mr. Price over to Mrs. Price No. 2 in consideration of $5,000.

We are glad to learn this, because it clearly disproves the theory that Mrs. Price No. 1 is a heartbroken and dying woman, and, also because it seems to us an eminently judicious way of making the best of a very bad bargain, so far as Mrs. Price No. 1 is concerned. Mr. Price in any case was a lost article of property so far as Mrs. Price No. 1 was involved. He had left her, anyhow, and if she had not consented to take the $5,000 and the $25 a week, she would simply have made a present of him to her successor.

How much wiser, and shrewder, and more comfortable all around to collect so large an amount of money on him, when, in point of fact, he was utterly and completely lost to her, and nobody else in the world showed the slightest inclination to bid a dollar for him?

WATTERSON-CONKLING-SPRAGUE.

A Scathing Attack by Watterson Upon the New York "Stalwart"—Mrs. Sprague's Statement.

WATTERSON VS. CONKLING.

[Louisville Courier-Journal.]

The tufted moth, with silky hair deftly brushed, and symmetrical legs neatly kept, is singed, then burped, by propinquity to the thing he loves, which is an eager flame.

Roscoe Conkling is that moth. Conkling, the "Stalwart" (great heavens, what a misnomer for such a creature!); Conkling, the "champion of human rights;" Conkling, the "statesman;" Conkling, the worshipped bully of the Stalwart horde; Conkling, the Adonis, emerges from the atmosphere of Providence like a poor, sneaking, whipped dog, bearing upon his beetling brow the brand which an angry husband alone can put there.

Conkling's gallantries, it seems, have been coeval with his life at Washington. His persistent attentions to Mrs. Sprague while attending to her business affairs, and the denouement at Providence, present him to the world as a most contemptible, ignoble character. To cover his own mishap, he lies to the public by rushing off a dispatch through the Associated Press to the country, to the effect that Sprague's difficulty was with the German Lincke, exclusively, and that he (Conkling) figured in the affair as a "friend of the family." The meanness of this act is inexpressible, but is characteristic of the selfish man who performed it. It places Mr. Conkling in the most despicable attitude.

A career like that of Conkling usually ends in bloodshed. Married men who flirt with all the pretty women they come across must calculate upon awakening jealousy and estrangement at home. Married men whose flirtations run into criminality and a brazen abandonment to passion must expect their carcasses to be pierced with bullets by the men whom they indirectly injure. Conkling's wife and daughter kept away from Washington to avoid the consciousness of the near presence of his manifold unfaithfulness. His infatuation with Mrs. Sprague has been the talk of Washington for some years. A superbly beautiful woman, she possesses that feminine vanity which delights in the adulation of handsome and distinguished men. Few women there are who are impervious to the incense of persistent devotion, especially if they are not happily married. They overlook the reflections which the eager tongue of scandal may utter upon the apparent situation. All their little encouragements of the admirer are carefully noted down in the book of the scandal-mongers. The lady is in peril, but she does not see it. The man is in peril, but he does not care. The moth hovers lovingly over the palpitating flame and bathes his face in it. Woe be to the man who troubles another's nest; who leads the public mind even to suspect that it has been defiled.

Roscoe Conkling may parade his pure patriotism, which everybody knows is a sham; he may inveigh against those he is pleased to call the "barbarians of the south;" he may bellow about "human rights" and "justice," but he, himself, stands before the world as a robber of domestic happiness; a sneaking bird of prey, who plays off his fine face and figure; a polished libertine; and he appears finally, a fowl with feathers bedraggled in the mire; a fugitive with pale, cowardly face, stealing out of a town, trembling before the justifiable rage of an indignant husband. Conkling is a cowardly brute; cowardly in politics; cowardly on the stump; cowardly on the floor of the senate. Behold your god, Stalwarts, with blanched face, trembling lips, quivering legs, sneaking like a whipped dog by night out of Providence, with a shotgun pointed at his sleek carcass!

MRS. SPRAGUE'S STATEMENT.

[Chicago Times Special.]

Providence, R. I., Aug. 14.—The following is the statement of Mrs. Senator Sprague in relation to the unfortunate difficulty at Narragansett Pier, which she has given permission to be published:

"As you must have surmised, Gov. Sprague's dissolute life and dissipated habits long ago interrupted our marital relations, though I have striven hard through untold humiliation and pain to hide from the world, for my children's sake, the true conditions of a blighted, miserable, domestic life. About a year ago even this poor semblance abruptly culminated after disgraceful orgies and arrest at Nantasket Beach, with the circumstances of which many people in Rhode Island are not unfamiliar. I then sought with my little girls the neighborhood of old friends and the shelter of my honored father's former home. There, dwelling almost within the shadow of his tomb, I felt more secure and less unprotected. Here kindly and, though covert malice pointed some censorious comments, relief came, and our circumscribed means were adequate to our simple and quiet mode of life. Gov. Sprague's irregularities having been visited upon him by the trustee administering his embarrassed estate, the contribution toward the maintenance of myself and children, without a word of explanation to me, was suddenly cut down to a palpably inadequate sum. Even this was remitted but for a few months. Then, owing to a complete rupture between Gov. Sprague and the trustee, all remittances ceased, and for six months past no money has been contributed toward the maintenance of his family or household by Gov. Sprague. In addition to greater wrongs,

UNPAID TRADESPEOPLE

to whom he was indebted have been urgent in their demands for payment, but he gave no heed to the indebtedness, even answering, when pressed by me to find a way to meet these just demands and relieve me of importunities, that "I must look to my powerful Washington friends for aid," and to my deep distress and mortification permitted, after long delay, a bill for carriage hire for his mother's use during a visit to me in Washington to be paid by the gentleman who had recommended to us the stable from which the carriage was hired. This and other more unmanly exhibitions have been incidental to the past year, while the brutality of recent events, the repetition of similar scenes of

enacted in former years, has finally driven us from the door, and filled the public prints of the country with a scandal too cruel to be endured without redress. Gov. Sprague's causeless and shameful persecution of the children's teacher is literally true as he tells the story, the real animus being as confessed, Gov. Sprague's unwillingness to be subjected at the table and in the household to the constant presence of a gentleman. The attempt to complicate with this matter is absurd. Gov. Sprague's affront to the guests in the house was most gross and without excuse. Mr. Martin, whom I had met in a very precarious condition of health en route for Narragansett Pier, I induced to go to Canonchet for quiet and good nursing. He was removed under Gov. Sprague's threats of murder to be done, at the imminent risk of his life. Mr. Conkling was of course as unconscious as I that Gov. Sprague sought occasion to enact the tragic role of the injured husband, for at their last meeting, not long since, Gov. Sprague had sought from Mr. Conkling not only but accepted at his hand a favor such as only the friendliest confidence could warrant. In his determination to overthrow Mr. Chaffee as trustee, and hoping to join forces with the creditor interest to drive him from his post, Gov. Sprague had carried away from the counting house of A. & W. Sprague the books of the Quidnick company, refusing to return them. Mr. Chaffe, in turn, refused until these books were returned, to permit Gov. Sprague to hold any business relations with the concern, and, of course, refused to permit him to draw any

LEGAL COUNSEL,

MONEY.

"This was the situation of affairs which, by coming to Rhode Island, I had hoped, through some influence or other brought to bear on Gov. Sprague, to help to set right and to secure by some means a maintenance for the four children for whose wants and education I have been and am now bearing the undivided burden. A conference with counsel employed by the firm achieved no results. Prof. Linck, under a contract with me for three months, was neither permitted to perform his duties nor paid and dismissed. We had no ostensible means for living at Canonchet without incurring additional indebtedness, to which I refused to be a party. In this awkward and

PAINFUL DILEMMA,

I requested Mr. Conkling, who had been already consulted by Mr. Sprague, and upon whose judgment and advice I have safely relied in my own matters, to see Gov. Sprague and try to ascertain what point there is in this proposed programme of opposition and what results were likely to follow that would benefit or provide for the children. Mr. Conkling stopped at Canonchet for this purpose, and was awaiting Gov. Sprague's return to seek an interview with him when the now notorious outbreak occurred. If any were exchanged between Mr. Conkling and Gov. Sprague at Canonchet they alone know what they were, for no one else heard them. What transpired in the village I do not know beyond what is reported in the sensational accounts given in the newspapers."

The publication of this letter, it is needless to say, is the most foolish thing that the lady could do. It gives the whole thing away, as it were.

AN ADVENTURER'S STORY.

The Projector of the Cardiff Giant Has His Say.

Giuseppe Sala, a stone-cutter and author of the stone hoaxes, the Cardiff giant and New Hampshire giants, says he, in company with others, once had a scheme to steal the remains of Benedict Arnold from the grave yard in London, but the police prevented its success. The party then went to Ireland where they decided on two schemes—one was to disinter a stone image, to be called the true St. Patrick, on the property of Earl Leitrim, and the other to dig up on the lands of a Mr. Coleman, at the Giant's Causeway, for the petrified body of Finn McCoal, the giant of the causeway. The first scheme was abandoned owing to a quarrel about the land with the earl's agent. The second scheme was partly successful. The giant was unearthed, but the Irish press, backed by scientists, made short work of him and the plotters returned to America. On the voyage other plans were discussed, among others the resurrection of Gen. Putnam's remains. Arrived in New York, the discussion was renewed, and Sala says that the feasibility of robbing the Stewart vault was canvassed by the party, including a man named Ford and a woman from Troy, but Sala could not agree with them. He says if Hilton furnishes him with sufficient money he will secure the Stewart grave robbers.

I had a severe attack of chills and fever. I tried Quinine, Arsenic and every remedy that I could hear of. Giles's Pills and Liniment made a complete cure of me.

SCIENTIFIC SCRAPS.

Fossil remains of the common Greenland seal have been found in the champlain clay beds of the Ottawa valley, in Canada.

Eighty-oneout of every 100 weather forecasts published since 1877 by the German nautical observatory proved to be correct. It is said our own signal service will exhibit an equally gratifying average.

A series of scientific experiments in France, relative to preventing the slipping of the wheels of a locomotive on the rails, has shown that the higher the rate of speed the greater the slipping, and that it is always more on a down than on a rising grade.

Private sewers should never be made with brick, for not only is there always certain danger of leakage both of fluids and gaseous contents, but they can be eaten into and through by rats, who thus not only carry the sewer soil into the houses, but their runs form convenient exit for sewer gas.

A proposal to use compressed air instead of gunpowder for blasting in mines has been brought forward in England. The plan is to employ air at a pressure of upward of 8,000 pounds to the square inch. Its probable success is indicated by the result of some tests recently made in the Wigan collieries.

A well-authenticated case of spontaneous combustion occurred recently in the suburbs of Oak Hill. A hemp sack saturated with varnish and used in polishing a floor was put in a basket for future use. It had of itself smouldered and finally produced a fire. The case is a curious one and of value from the knowledge it affords of spontaneous combustion.

A new and dangerous method for improving the appearance of green coffee, is being employed in the market. It is no less than the painting of the same with a poison called "chrome green." We have seen the certificate of a chemist who analyzed specimens of the "doctored" berry, and who declares it to contain poison. In view of this fact, dealers and consumers should pay close attention to what they are getting, and see that they are not cheated and injured at the same time.

A trial has been made of the new 100-ton gun at Woolwich. This gun is 36 feet in length, and the bore which has a calibre of 17¾ inches, increasing to 19¾ inches in the chamber, is 33 feet in length. At the muzzle the thickness of metal is only about 5 inches, but at the breach the metal is 2 feet 5 inches through, making the maximum diameter 6 feet 6 inches. The cartridge consisted of 440 pounds of cube powder, and occupied 5 feet of the bore, and above the cartridge 2,010-pound projectile, which was 2 feet 8 inches long. The speed of the shot was 1,500 feet per second.

When iron was first dug up from the bowels of the earth and converted into instruments of the chase or domestic utensils there is no means of knowing, for the early history of the world is wanting in such details. To kill a man with an instrument of iron was punishable with death under the Mosaic law. Moses has recorded of Og, king of Basan, that he had a bedstead of iron that was nine cubits in length and four in breadth. And when he reminded the Israelites that the Lord had brought them out of the iron furnace, even the land of Egypt, he promised to bring them into a land whose stones were iron, and out of whose hills they might dig brass. The Greeks ascribed the discovery of iron to themselves. The Romans did not know how to provide their iron furnaces with bellows, and to ignite the fuel placed the grate in the direction of the prevailing wind. As a substitute for it in their armor they employed bronze.

Capt. George E. Belknap, U. S. N., in an article in the United Service, for July, gives some of the results of the Tuscarora's work in 1874, in sounding the Pacific Ocean, which eclipse the celebrated achievements on the voyage of the ship Challenger. The Tuscarora traversed 16,600 miles, and made 483 casts, of which 32 were in depths of over 3,000 fathoms, and 9 in from 4,000 to 4,655 fathoms. Good specimens were brought up from four of the deepest casts; in one the cylinder struck rock; in the two last and deepest casts the wire broke—one from a momentary carelessness at the reel; and the other, after 400 fathoms had been reeled in, "pulled in two from the strain at that great depth, five and a quarter miles." "So far," says Belknap, "these are the deepest soundings ever made." Attempts have been made by partisans of the Challenger to throw discredit upon these results, but Capt. Belknap effectually disposes of all objections.

"Pinafore" is on the boards in Buffalo, N. Y.—and everywhere else almost. There seems to be no end.

The Carman family who gave one or two concerts at the Academy last winter are giving concerts in Illinois.

Mr. George Conly, the basso, who delighted Fort Wayne people by his fine singing at the Kellogg-Rose concert, is in London.

There is probably no better orchestra in the world than Theodore Thomas's, who are to give a concert at the Academy in December.

An American boy has just received the first prize in the violin class at the Paris Conservatoire. The prize was awarded unanimously.

Mr. Clem. Stapleford is to return to Louisville next week. Mr. Stapleford is a teacher of the voice in the Louisville Conservatory of Music.

Another "Pinafore" ship is being built on the lake at Oakland Garden, Boston. The first performance will be given the middle of August.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Leslie are in the city with their parents Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Sleeper. Mr. Leslie has just closed a very successful term of normal music school at Defiance, O.

A gentleman at Boston Highlands, had a parrot which recited selections from "Pinafore." One morning the cage was found open, and the parrot was missing. Upon being asked where the singer had gone, the gentleman answered: "Silent be, it was the cat!"

Peninsula Sængerbund meets at Toledo, Aug. 18, 19 and 20. There is to be a chorus of about 600 voices. The soloists are Mlle. Litta, soprano, Mrs. Florance Rice-Knox, contralto, Sig. Tagliapietra, baritone, Herr Remenyi, violinist, and L. F. Boos, cornetist. Able's celebrated Detroit orchestra will be present.

Emma Abbott is making great preparations for the coming operatic season. She says she is receiving on an average four new operas a week, which are sure to be better than "Pinafore," if the authors are not mistaken. One of the operas is entitled "The Little Pilgrim," the plot of which is founded on the life of Miss Abbott.

Since the first introduction of Dr. F. Wilhoft's Anti-Periodic or Fever and Ague Tonic, it has steadily gained in popularity with the people, but since its proprietors, Wheelock, Finlay & Co., gave its composition to the world, so that everybody can know what it is, the sale of it has doubled itself. It contains no dangerous drug, and yet it is the greatest specific against malarial diseases, such as Chills and Fever, and Dumb Chills. For sale by all druggists.

beauty of the morning appealed to her in vain. She felt the refreshment of the cool, fragrant air, but she hardly noticed the lovely blue of the sky, or the bright sunshine that gave a gayety and an interest to the commonest objects around her.

After walking nearly an hour she began to feel tired, and looked about for a shady place to rest in.

Beyond and behind her there was only the high-road and the flat country, but by her side stood a little wooden building, half inn, half coffee-house, backed by a large shady pleasure garden, the gates of which stood invitingly open. Some workmen in the garden were putting up a stage for fireworks, but the place was otherwise quiet and lonely enough. It was only used at night as a sort of rustic Ranelagh, to which the citizens of Pisa resorted for pure air and amusement after the fatigues of the day. Observing that there were no visitors in the grounds, Nanina ventured in, intending to take a quarter of an hour's rest in the coolest place she could find before returning to Pisa.

She had passed the back of a wooden summer-house in a secluded part of the gardens, when she suddenly missed the dog from her side, and, looking round after him, saw that he was standing behind the summer-house with his ears erect and his nose to the ground, having evidently that instant scented something that excited his suspicion.

Thinking it possible that he might be meditating an attack on some unfortunate cat, she turned to see what he was watching. The carpenters engaged on the firework stage were just then hammering at it violently. The noise prevented her from hearing that Scaramuccia was growling, but she could feel that he was the moment she laid her hand on his back. Her curiosity was excited, and she stooped down close to him, to look through a crack in the boards before which he stood in the summer-house.

She was startled at seeing a lady and gentleman sitting inside. The place she was looking through was not high enough up to enable her to see their faces, but she recognized, or thought she recognized, the pattern of the lady's dress as one which she had noticed in former days in the Demoiselle Grifondi's show-room. Rising quickly, her eye detected a hole in the boards about the level of her own height, caused by a knot having been forced out of the wood. She looked through it to ascertain, without being discovered, if the wearer of the familiar dress was the person she had taken her to be; and saw, not Brigada only, as she had expected, but Father Rocco as well. At the same moment the carpenters left off hammering and began to saw. The new sound from the firework stage was regular and not loud. The voices of the occupants of the summer-house reached her through it, and she heard Brigida pronounce the name of Count Fabio.

Instantly stooping down once more by the dog's side, she caught his muzzle firmly in both her hands. It was the only way to keep Scaramuccia from growling again, at a time when there was no din of hammering to prevent him from being heard. Those two words, "Count Fabio," in the mouth of another woman, excited a jealous anxiety in her. What could Brigida have to say in connection with that name? She never came near the Ascoli palace—what right or reason could she have to talk of Fabio?

"Did you hear what I said?" she heard Brigida ask, in her coolest, hardest tone.

"No," the priest answered. "At least, not all of it."

"I will repeat it, then. I asked what had so suddenly determined you to give up all idea of making any future experiments on the superstitious fears of Count Fabio?"

"In the first ploce, the result of the experiment already tried has been so much more serious than I had anticipated, that I believe the end I had in view in making it has been answered already."

"Well; that is your only reason?"

"Another shock to his mind might be fatal to him. I can use what I believe to be a justifiable fraud to prevent his marrying again; but I can not burden myself with a crime."

"That is your second reason; but I believe you have another yet. The suddenness with which you sent to me last night to appoint a meeting in this lonesome place; the emphatic manner in which you requested—I may say almost ordered—me to bring the wax mask here, suggest to my mind that something must have happened. What is it? I am a woman, and my curiosity must be satisfied. After the secrets you have trusted to me already, you need not hesitate, I think, to trust me with one more."

"Perhaps not. The secret this time is, moreover, of no great importance. You know that the wax mask you wore at the ball was made in a plaster mold taken off the face of my brother's statue?"

"Yes, I know that."

"My brother has just returned to his studio; has found a morsel of the plaster I used for the mold sticking in the hair of the statue, and has asked me, as the person left in charge of his work-rooms, for an explanation. Such an explanation as I could offer has not satisfied him, and he talks of making further inquiries. Considering that it will be used no more, I think it safest to destroy the wax mask; and I asked you to bring it here, that I might see it burned or broken up with my own eyes. Now you know all you wanted to know; and now, therefore, it is my turn to remind you that I have not yet had a direct answer to the first question I addressed to you when we met here. Have you brought the wax mask with you, or have you not?"

"I have not."

"And why?"

Just as that question was put, Nanina felt the dog dragging himself free of her grasp on his mouth. She had been listening hitherto with such painful intensity, with such all-absorbing emotions of suspense, terror, and astonishment, that she had not noticed his efforts to get away, and had continued mechanically to hold his mouth shut. But now she was aroused by the violence of his struggles to the knowledge that, unless she hit upon some new means of quieting him, he would have his mouth free, and would betray her by a growl.

In an agony of apprehension lest she should lose a word of the momentous conversation, she made a desperate attempt to appeal to the dog's fondness for her by suddenly flinging both her arms round his neck, and kissing his rough, hairy cheek. The stratagem succeeded. Scaramuccia had, for many years past, never received any greater marks of his mistres's kindness for him than such as a pat on the head or a present of a lump of sugar might convey. His dog's nature was utterly confounded by the unexpected warmth of Nanina's caress, and he struggled up vigorously in her arms to try and return it by licking her face. She could easily prevent him from doing this, and could so gain a few minutes more to listen behind the summer-house without danger of discovery.

She had lost Brigida's answer to Father Rocco's question; but she was in time to hear her next words.

"We are alone here," said Brigida. "I am a woman, and I don't know that you may not have come armed. It is only the commonest precaution on the part not to give you a chance of getting at the wax mask till I have made my conditions."

"You never said a word about conditions before."

"True. I remember telling you that I wanted nothing but the novelty of going to the masquerade in the character of my dead enemy. and the luxury of being able to terrify the man who had brutally ridiculed me in old days in the studio. That was the truth. But it is not the less the truth that our experiment on Count Fabio has detained me in this city much longer than I ever intended, that I am all but penniless, and that I deserve to be paid. In plain words, will you buy the mask of me for two hurdred scudi?"

"I have not twenty scudi in the world at my own free disposal."

"You must find two hundred if you want the wax mask. I don't wish to threaten, but money I must have. I mention the sum of two hundred scudi, because that is the exact amount offered in the public handbills by Count Fabio's friends for the discovery of the woman who wore the yellow mask at the Marquis Melani's ball. What have I to do but to earn that money, if I please, by going to the palace, taking the wax mask with me, and telling them that I am the woman. Suppose I confess in that way; they can do nothing to hurt me, and I should be two hundred scudi the richer. You might be injured, to be sure, if they insisted on knowing who made the wax model, and who suggested the ghastly disguise—"

"Wretch! do you believe that my character could be injured by the unsuported evidence of any words from your lips?"

Fanny Davenport's Marriage.

[Dramatic News.]

Scarcely had Miss Fanny Davenport and Mr. Edwin Price been made one flesh before the Dramatic News was showered upon with all sorts of notes and letters, and postal-cards protesting that "something ought to be done about it." Which, of course, was a circuitous way of requesting the Dramatic News to turn its double-shotted batteries on the happy bride and groom.

The Dramatic News, however, respectfully declines to do anything of the sort, and for the following reasons:

In the first place, Miss Davenport's private affairs are no concern whatever either of the Dramatic News or of its readers—so long as Miss Davenport does not make them public. Last week, when Miss Davenport had given no sign of her intention to marry Mr. Price, we protested that it was scandalous, under the circumstances, for Mr. Price to be Miss Davenport's companion and associate on the stage. Her marriage to him has removed that objection absolutely.

In the second place, Miss Davenport's marriage seems to have entirely and completely satisfied the only persons actually involved. At one time it looked as if Mrs. Katie Baker Price, Miss Davenport's immediate predecessor in Mr. Price's affections, really had a grievance. Her friends, who were never so numerous as they were on this occasion, protested that she was heartbroken, that she was dying, and her husband's infidelity had killed her. And it did look at one time as if the fate of Mrs. Price No. 1 was a hard one, beyond the reach of all consolation.

But we are glad to learn that the whole matter has been amicably adjusted all round. Mrs. Price No. 1 makes a complete and thorough conveyance and transfer of Mr. Price to Mrs. Price No. 2 on the following conditions:

Mr. Price is to pay Mrs. Price No. 1 the sum of $5,000 down and $25 a week, and Mrs. Price No. 1, on her part, withdraws all objections to his becoming the consort of Mrs. Price No. 2.

Of course, as Mrs. Price No. 1 thoroughly understands, the $5,000 paid down nominally by Mr. Price is really paid down by Miss Davenport, the Mrs. Price No. 2 of the complication. So that Mrs. Price No. 1, as a matter of fact, turns Mr. Price over to Mrs. Price No. 2 in consideration of $5,000.

We are glad to learn this, because it clearly disproves the theory that Mrs. Price No. 1 is a heartbroken and dying woman, and, also because it seems to us an eminently judicious way of making the best of a very bad bargain, so far as Mrs. Price No. 1 is concerned. Mr. Price in any case was a lost article of property so far as Mrs. Price No. 1 was involved. He had left her, anyhow, and if she had not consented to take the $5,000 and the $25 a week, she would simply have made a present of him to her successor.

How much wiser, and shrewder, and more comfortable all around to collect so large an amount of money on him, when, in point of fact, he was utterly and completely lost to her, and nobody else in the world showed the slightest inclination to bid a dollar for him?

WATTERSON-CONKLING-SPRAGUE.

A Scathing Attack by Watterson Upon the New York "Stalwart"—Mrs. Sprague's Statement.

WATTERSON VS. CONKLING.

[Louisville Courier-Journal.]

The tufted moth, with silky hair deftly brushed, and symmetrical legs neatly kept, is singed, then burned, by propinquity to the thing he loves, which is an eager flame.

Roscoe Conkling is that moth. Conkling, the "Stalwart" (great heavens, what a misnomer for such a creaturf!); Conkling, the "champion of human rights;" Conkling, the "statesman;" Conkling, the worshipped bully of the Stalwart horde; Conkling, the Adonis, emerges from the atmosphere of Providence like a poor, sneaking, whipped dog, bearing upon his beetling brow the brand which an angry husband alone can put there.

Conkling's gallantries, it seems, have been coeval with his life at Washington. His persistent attentions to Mrs. Sprague while attending to her business affairs, and the denouement at Providence, present him to the world as a most contemptible, ignoble character. To cover his own mishap, he lies to the public by rushing off a dispatch through the Associated Press to the country, to the effect that Sprague's difficulty was with the German Lincke, exclusively, and that he (Conkling) figured in the affair as a "friend of the family." The meanness of this act is inexpressible, but is characteristic of the selfish man who performed it. It places Mr. Conkling in the most despicable attitude.

A career like that of Conkling usually ends in bloodshed. Married men who flirt with all the pretty women they come across must calculate upon awakening jealousy and estrangement at home. Married men whose flirtations run into criminality and a brazen abandonment to passion must expect their carcasses to be pierced with bullets by the men whom they indirectly injure. Conkling's wife and daughter kept away from Washington to avoid the consciousness of the near presence of his manifold unfaithfulness. His infatuation with Mrs. Sprague has been the talk of Washington for some years. A superbly beautiful woman, she possesses that feminine vanity which delights in the adulation of handsome and distinguished men. Few women there are who are impervious to the incense of persistent devotion, especially if they are not happily married. They overlook the reflections which the eager tongue of scandal may utter upon the apparent situation. All their little encouragements of the admirer are carefully noted down in the book of the scandal-mongers. The lady is in peril, but she does not see it. The man is in peril, but he does not care. The moth hovers lovingly over the palpitating flame and bathes his face in it. Woe be to the man who troubles another's nest; who leads the public mind even to suspect that it has been defiled.

Roscoe Conkling may parade his pure patriotism, which everybody knows is a sham; he may inveigh against those he is pleased to call the "barbarians of the south;" he may bellow about "human rights" and "justice," but he, himself, stands before the world as a robber of domestic happiness; a sneaking bird of prey, who plays off his fine face and figure; a polished libertine; and he appears finally, a fowl with feathers bedraggled in the mire; a fugitive with pale, cowardly face, stealing out of a town, trembling before the justifiable rage of an indignant husband. Conkling is a cowardly brute; cowardly in politics; cowardly on the stump; cowardly on the floor of the senate. Behold your god, Stalwarts, with blanched face, trembling lips, quivering legs, sneaking like a whipped dog by night out of Providence, with a shotgun pointed at his sleek carcass!

MRS. SPRAGUE'S STATEMENT.

[Chicago Times Special.]

Providence, R. I., Aug. 14.—The following is the statement of Mrs. Senator Sprague in relation to the unfortunate difficulty at Narragansett Pier, which she has given permission to be published:

"As you must have surmised, Gov. Sprague's dissolute life and dissipated habits long ago interrupted our marital relations, though I have striven hard through untold humiliation and pain to hide from the world, for my children's sake, the true conditions of a blighted, miserable, domestic life. About a year ago even this poor semblance abruptly culminated after disgraceful orgies and arrest at Nantasket Beach, with the circumstances of which many people in Rhode Island are not unfamiliar. I then sought with my little girls the neighborhood of old friends and the shelter of my honored father's former home. There, dwelling almost within the shadow of his tomb, I felt more secure and less unprotected. Here kindly and, though covert malice pointed some censorious comments, relief came, and our circumscribed means were adequate to our simple and quiet mode of life. Gov. Sprague's irregularities having been visited upon him by the trustee administering his embarrassed estate, the contribution toward the maintenance of myself and children, without a word of explanation to me, was suddenly cut down to a palpably inadequate sum. Even this was remitted but for a few months. Then, owing to a complete rupture between Gov. Sprague and the trustee, all remittances ceased, and for six months past no money has been contributed toward the maintenance of his family or household by Gov. Sprague. In addition to greater wrongs,

UNPAID TRADESPEOPLE

to whom he was indebted have been urgent in their demands for payment, but he gave no heed to the indebtedness, even answering, when pressed by me to find a way to meet these just demands and relieve me of importunities, that "I must look to my powerful Washington friends for aid," and to my deep distress and mortification permitted, after long delay, a bill for carriage hire for his mother's use during a visit to me in Washington to be paid by the gentleman who had recommended to us the stable from which the carriage was hired. This and other more unmanly exhibitions have been incidental to the past year, while the brutality of recent events, the repetition of similar scenes of

enacted in former years, has finally driven us from the door, and filled the public prints of the country with a scandal too cruel to be endured without redress. Gov. Sprague's causeless and shameful persecution of the children's teacher is literally true as he tells the story, the real animus being as confessed, Gov. Spraque's unwillingness to be subjected at the table and in the household to the constant presence of a gentleman. The attempt to complicate with this matter is absurd. Gov. Sprague's affront to the guests in the house was most gross and without excuse. Mr. Martin, whom I had met in a very precarious condition of health en route for Narragansett Pier, I induced to go to Canouchet for quiet and good nursing. He was removed under Gov. Sprague's threats of murder to be done, at the imminent risk of his life. Mr. Conkling was of course as unconscious as I that Gov. Sprague sought occasion to enact the tragic role of the injured husband, for at their last meeting, not long since, Gov. Sprague had sought from Mr. Conkling not only

LEGAL COUNSEL,

but accepted at his hand a favor such as only the friendliest confidence could warrant. In his determination to overthrow Mr. Chaffee as trustee, and hoping to join forces with the creditor interest to drive him from his post, Gov. Sprague had carried away from the counting house of A. & W. Sprague the books of the Quidnick company, refusing to return them. Mr. Chaffe, in turn, refused until these books were returned, to permit Gov. Sprague to hold any business relations with the concern, and, of course, refused to permit him to draw any

MONEY.

"This was the situation of affairs which, by coming to Rhode Island, I had hoped, through some influence or other brought to bear on Gov. Sprague, to help to set right and to secure by some means a maintenance for the four children for whose wants and education I have been and am now bearing the undivided burden. A conference with counsel employed by the firm achieved no results. Prof. Linck, under a contract with me for three months, was neither permitted to perform his duties nor paid and dismissed. We had no ostensible means for living at Canonchet without incurring additional indebtedness, to which I refused to be a party. In this awkward and

PAINFUL DILEMMA,

I requested Mr. Conkling, who had been already consulted by Mr. Sprague, and upon whose judgment and advice I have safely relied in my own matters, to see Gov. Sprague and try to ascertain what point there is in this proposed programme of opposition and what results were likely to follow that would benefit or provide for the children. Mr. Conkling stopped at Canonchet for this purpose, and was awaiting Gov. Sprague's return to seek an interview with him when the now notorious outbreak occurred. If any were exchanged between Mr. Conkling and Gov. Sprague at Canonchet they alone know what they were, for no one else heard them. What transpired in the village I do not know beyond what is reported in the sensational accounts given in the newspapers."

The publication of this letter, it is needless to say, is the most foolish thing that the lady could do. It gives the whole thing away, as it were.

AN ADVENTURER'S STORY.

The Projector of the Cardiff Giant Has His Say.

Giuseppe Sala, a stone-cutter and author of the stone hoaxes, the Cardiff giant and New Hampshire giants, says he, in company with others, once had a scheme to steal the remains of Benedict Arnold from the grave yard in London, but the police prevented its success. The party then went to Ireland where they decided on two schemes—one was to disinter a stone image, to be called the true St. Patrick, on the property of Earl Leitrim, and the other to dig up on the lands of a Mr. Coleman, at the Giant's Causeway, for the petrified body of Finn McCoal, the giant of the causeway. The first scheme was abandoned owing to a quarrel about the land with the earl's agent. The second scheme was partly successful. The giant was unearthed, but the Irish press, backed by scientists, made short work of him and the plotters returned to America. On the voyage other plans were discussed, among others the resurrection of Gen. Putnam's remains. Arrived in New York, the discussion was renewed, and Sala says that the feasibility of robbing the Stewart vault was canvassed by the party, including a man named Ford and a woman from Troy, but Sala could not agree with them. He says if Hilton furnishes him with sufficient money he will secure the Stewart grave robbers.

SCIENTIFIC SCRAPS.

Fossil remains of the common Greenland seal have been found in the champlain clay beds of the Ottawa valley, in Canada.

Eighty-one out of every 100 weather forecasts published since 1877 by the German nautical observatory proved to be correct. It is said our own signal service will exhibit an equally gratifying average.

A series of scientific experiments in France, relative to preventing the slipping of the wheels of a locomotive on the rails, has shown that the higher the rate of speed the greater the slipping, and that it is always more on a down than on a rising grade.

Private sewers should never be made with brick, for not only is there always certain danger of leakage both of fluids and gaseous contents, but they can be eaten into and through by rats, who thus not only carry the sewer soil into the houses, but their runs form convenient exit for sewer gas.

A proposal to use compressed air instead of gunpowder for blasting in mines has been brought forward in England. The plan is to employ air at a pressure of upward of 8,000 pounds to the square inch. Its probable success is indicated by the result of some tests recently made in the Wigan collieries.

A well-authenticated case of spontaneous combustion occurred recently in the suburbs of Oak Hill. A hemp sack saturated with varnish and used in polishing a floor was put in a basket for future use. It had of itself smouldered and finally produced a fire. The case is a curious one and of value from the knowledge it affords of spontaneous combustion.

A new and dangerous method for improving the appearance of green coffee, is being employed in the market. It is no less than the painting of the same with a poison called "chrome green." We have seen the certificate of a chemist who analyzed specimens of the "doctored" berry, and who declares it to contain poison. In view of this fact, dealers and consumers should pay close attention to what they are getting, and see that they are not cheated and injured at the same time.

A trial has been made of the new 100-ton gun at Woolwich. This gun is 36 feet in length, and the bore which has a calibre of 17¾ inches, increasing to 19¾ inches in the chamber, is 33 feet in length. At the muzzle the thickness of metal is only about 5 inches, but at the breach the metal is 2 feet 5 inches through, making the maximum diameter 6 feet 6 inches. The cartridge consisted of 440 pounds of cube powder, and occupied 5 feet of the bore, and above the cartridge 2,010-pound projectile, which was 2 feet 8 inches long. The speed of the shot was 1,500 feet per second.

When iron was first dug up from the bowels of the earth and converted into instruments of the chase or domestic utensils there is no means of knowing, for the early history of the world is wanting in such details. To kill a man with an instrument of iron was punishable with death under the Mosaic law. Moses has recorded of Og, king of Basan, that he had a bedstead of iron that was nine cubits in length and four in breadth. And when he reminded the Israelites that the Lord had brought them out of the iron furnace, even the land of Egypt, he promised to bring them into a land whose stones were iron, and out of whose hills they might dig brass. The Greeks ascribed the discovery of iron to themselves. The Romans did not know how to provide their iron furnaces with bellows, and to ignite the fuel placed the grate in the direction of the prevailing wind. As a substitute for it in their armor they employed bronze.

Capt. George E. Belknap, U. S. N., in an article in the United Service, for July, gives some of the results of the Tuscarora's work in 1874, in sounding the Pacific Ocean, which eclipse the celebrated achievements on the voyage of the ship Challenger. The Tuscarora traversed 16,600 miles, and made 483 casts, of which 32 were in depths of over 3,000 fathoms, and 9 in from 4,000 to 4,655 fathoms. Good specimens were brought up from four of the deepest casts; in one the cylinder struck rock; in the two last and deepest casts the wire broke—one from a momentary carelessness at the reel; and the other, after 400 fathoms had been reeled in, "pulled in two from the strain at that great depth, five and a quarter miles." "So far," says Belknap, "these are the deepest soundings ever made." Attempts have been made by partisans of the Challenger to throw discredit upon these results, but Capt. Belknap effectually disposes of all objections.

Peninsula Sængerbund meets at Toledo, Aug. 18, 19 and 20. There is to be a chorus of about 600 voices. The soloists are Mlle. Litta, soprano, Mrs. Florance Rice-Knox, contralto, Sig. Tagliapietra, baritone, Herr Remenyi, violinist, and L. F. Boos, cornetist. Able's celebrated Detroit orchestra will be present.

Emma Abbott is making great preparations for the coming operatic season. She says she is receiving on an average four new operas a week, which are sure to be better than "Pinafore," if the authors are not mistaken. One of the operas is entitled "The Little Pilgrim," the plot of which is founded on the life of Miss Abbott.

Since the first introduction of Dr. F. Wilhoft's Anti-Periodic or Fever and Ague Tonic, it has steadily gained in popularity with the people, but since its proprietors, Wheelock, Finlay & Co., gave its composition to the world, so that everybody can know what it is, the sale of it has doubled itself. It contains no dangerous drug, and yet it is the greatest specific against malarial diseases, such as Chills and Fever, and Dumb Chills. For sale by all druggists.

I Wish Everybody to Know.

Rev. George H. Thayer, an old citizen of this vicinity, known to every one as a most influential citizen and Christian minister of the M. E. Church, just this moment stopped in our store to say: "I wish everybody to know that I consider that both myself and wife owe our lives to Shiloh's Consumption Cure." It is having a tremendous sale over our counters, and is giving perfect satisfaction in all cases of lung diseases, such as nothing else has done.

The rain last night was "too much water" for the temperance folks of the city. The attendance at the Academy was small.

A three cornered double-pointed side-geared shoulder-hitting matinee was given at Charley Diehm's ranch Thursday night.

What with a headless rooster, a reformed clown and a female base ball game in prospect, Fort Wayne is a metropolitan city.

Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud? or words to that effect, when we roll in the luxury of a headless rooster and a female base ball match all in one week.

The Gazette of yesterday hauls the constables over the coals, but unjustly implicates all of them. They say they would like to hear more particulars about the matters in controversy.

Daisy de Younge has filed, with the committee on police and prisons, written charges against Policeman George Humbrecht, which will be investigated immediately after the libel suit between the same parties, which is set for next Tuesday, before Justice Zollinger.

If you want a situation, or to employ help, or have anything to rent or sell or lease, or have found or lost anything, advertise in the half-cent column of the SENTINEL. It is very cheap, and will be read by more people than if printed in all the other daily papers in the city.

Yesterday afternoon about half past 3, as Mrs. Remus, residing on Miner street, was visiting her mother, Mrs. Beach on Broadway, some person entered her residence and went through the bureau, taking a revolver, numerous small articles and $23 in cash. There is no clue to the thieves.

Sam Laih, of Chicago, is in the city revelling in the luxury of a genuine Hoosier ague shake.

There is no truth in the report that the horses, Capt. Crapo and Jessie Dixon are to be sold.

Marshall Diehl left for Illinois last night. He expects to return with the Morgan & Beach burglars.

Charley McCulloch and Charley Brackenridge will take in the Alert excursion to Niagara Falls.

Al. Friend leaves for Chicago to-night accompanied by A. C. Greenebaum, who is going to visit his child.

J. D. Cook was the original surveyor of the Muncie Railroad line, which he helped to lay out twenty-five years ago.

The driving at the park last evening was a very enjoyable affair. Nothing transpired to mar the pleasure of the occasion.

J. D. Cook left this morning for Toledo. He will return Monday, when an advertisement for iron for the water works will be prepared and published.

The funeral of A. Frossard, of New Haven, took place to-day under the auspices of the French Benevolent Society. Two large busloads from this city were in attendance.

Mr. Cabell, of Lafayette, is in the city in consultation with the officers of the Terre Haute Narrow Gauge Railroad, for the purpose of negotiating for the purchase of the right of way for the above road. An understanding will probably be arrived at to-day.

The funeral of the late Mrs. John Filcer took place from the cathedral this morning and was largely attended. The floral tributes were exceedingly handsome. The remains were followed to their last resting place in Lindenwood Cemetery by a very long procession.

While the workmen at the temple last evening were engaged in hoisting a large stone from a wagon, the wire cable supporting the derrick gave way and the derrick fell over. No one was injured, although one man narrowly escaped being entangled in the cable as it fell.

A Chicago Times special from Litchfield, Ill., reports the arrest at that place of four young men giving their names as Henry Smith, Frank Hibber, James Wilson and George Kinter, on whose persons were found several new knives and revolvers, supposed to be stolen. They said they came from Fort Wayne. Perhaps they are the persons who burglarized Morgan & Beach's store.

Wm. S. Moore, advance agent of the Female Athletic Association of Philadelphia and New York, is in the city. The "Female Athletic Association" consists of two female base ball nines, who play at Swinney Park next Tuesday afternoon. These are the same nines which played at Baltimore a few weeks ago, an account of which game was published in the SENTINEL at the time.

THE RAILROADS.

Freigh on the Wabash is increasing again.

Everything is quiet on the Grand Rapids road.

The Pittsburgh road is being ballested with stone as fast as the supply will permit.

The Pittsburgh is putting up a fine new depot at Delphos, O., which is almost completed.

A hatless individual got off No. 1 on the Pittsburgh and struck a bee line for a hat store.

Emigrant travel over the Pittsburgh is not quite so heavy as during the earlier part of the summer.

Conductor Jean Sullivan, of the Pittsburgh, is running the "Musical Caboose" (No. 4,266) during the sickness of Conductor Prendiville.

A Solitary Drunk.

"Benjamin arise" said the mayor, and Deputy Ben arose. "Hold up your hand, and you solemnly swear, and call Thomas Shaughnessy."

Thomas was charged with having been found unlawfully and awfully drunk, and to add additional injury it was at 6 o'clock in the morning.

This state of things couldn't be allowed and the mayor suggested that he donate $3 to the city and depart in peace.

A grand excursion from Fort Wayne to Toledo will take place next Sunday under the auspices of the Harmonia Singing Society. Fare for the round trip only $2. Tickets for the round trip good for return until August 21st, $2.75. Don't fail to go and attend the great Sangerfest.

World's Dispensary Medical Ass'n,

BUFFALO AND LONDON.

Incorporated January, 1876. Capital Stock $1,000,00.

(Successors to R. V. PIERCE, M. D.)

DR. R. V. PIERCE, having acquired a world-wide reputation in the treatment of Chronic Diseases, resulting in a professional business far exceeding his individual ability to conduct, some years ago induced several medical gentlemen to associate themselves with him, as the Faculty of the World's Dispensary, the Consulting Department of which has since been merged with the INVALIDS' HOTEL. The organization has been completed and incorporated under the name and style of World's Dispensary Medical Association, with the following officers: Hon. R. V. PIERCE, President; F. D. PIERCE, Vice-President; JOHN E. PIERCE, Secretary; LESTER B. SMITH, Treasurer.

NINE PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS of eminence and skill have been chosen as the Faculty.

CHRONIC DISEASES of all forms come within the province of our several specialties.

LUNG DISEASES—This division of practice is very ably managed by a gentleman of mature judgment and skill. Bronchial, Throat and Lung Diseases treated with the most successful results.

DISEASES OF WOMEN.—Especially are our facilities of a superior order for the cure of all those chronic diseases peculiar to females.

NERVOUS DISEASES—Paralysis, Nervous Debility, Epilepsy (Fits), Chore (St. Vitus's Dance), Neuralgia, and other nervous affections, receive the attention of an expert in this specialty.

NOT NECESSARY TO SEE PATIENTS.—By our original system of diagnosis, we can treat many chronic diseases as successfully without as with a personal consultation. For particulars see "People's Common Sense Medical Adviser" (1,000 pages, sent post-paid for $1.50) or "Invalids' and Tourists' Guide Book" (100 pages, 10 cents post-paid).

SURGICAL CASES.—Among the operations which we are called upon most frequently to perform, are those for Nasal Polypus, Harelip, Tumors, Fistula in Ano, Piles, Hernia (Rupture), Hydrocele (Dropsy of the Scrotum), Varicocele, Ovarian and Uterine Tumors, Calculi (Stone in the Bladder), Stricture, etc., etc. We also treat successfully, by a new method without surgical operation, Cancers, Club-feet, Spinal Curvature, and other deformities. (See pamphlet entitled, "Motion as a Curative Agent," sent on receipt of 10 cents.)

Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Ass'n,
BUFFALO, N. Y.

Woman.

By an immense practice at the World's Dispensary and Invalids' Hotel, having treated many thousand cases of those diseases peculiar to woman, I have been enabled to perfect a most potent and positive remedy for these diseases.

To designate this natural specific, I have named it

Dr. Price's Favorite Prescription

The term, however, is but a feeble expression of my high appreciation of its value, based upon personal observation. I have, while witnessing its positive results in the special diseases incident to the organism of woman, singled it out as the Climax or Crowning Gem of my medical career. On its merits, as a positive, safe and effectual remedy for this class of diseases, and one that will, at all times and all circumstances, act kindly, I am willing to stake my reputation as a physician; and so confident am I that it will not disappoint the most sanguine expectations of a single invalid lady who uses it for any of of the ailments for which I recommend it, that I offer and sell it under A POSITIVE GUARANTEE. (For conditions, see pamphlet wrapping bottle.)

The following are among those diseases in which my Favorite Prescription has worked cures, as if by magic, and with a certainty never before attained by any medicine: Leucorrhœa, Excessive Flowing, Painful Monthly Periods, Suppressions when from unnatural causes, Irregularities, Weak Back, Prolapsus, or falling of the Uterus, Anteversion and Retroversion, Bearing-down Sensations, Internal Heat, Nervous Depression, Debility, Despondency, Threatened Miscarriage, Chronic Congestion, Inflammation and Ulceration of the Uterus, Impotency, Barrenness, or Sterility, and Female Weakness. I do not extol this medicine as a "cure-all," but it admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most perfect specific in all chronic diseases of the sexual system of women. It will not disappoint, nor will it do harm, in any state or condition.

Those who desire further information on these subjects can obtain it in THE PEOPLE'S COMMON SENSE MEDICAL ADVISER, a book of over 900 pages, sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1.50. It treats minutely of those diseases peculiar to Females, and gives much valuable advice in regard to the management of those affections.

THE CITY.

Cooler.

The corn doctor has arriv.

C. W. Edsall is on the sick list.

P. J. Wise is on duty again to-day.

Councilman Bash's dog ordinance is a good thing.

James Wilkinson lost a pocket book and he wants it.

Perry, W. U., has embarked in the dry goods business.

The juvenile row was adjusted by Ryan this morning.

Among recent distinguished arrivals is the headless rooster.

The Gazette man as a musical critic is not an eminent success.

The brick front at 225 Calhoun street has been completed.

Only "one more unfortunate" was lodged in the calaboose last night.

Miss Love returned yesterday afternoon to her home in Indianapolis.

The council held an adjourned session at John Leichner's religious book store last night.

The Qui Vive Club will be entertained by Mrs. W. F. LaBonta next Tuesday evening.

Bob Stratton is fitting up a fine office in Mergel's new block. He will take possession next Tuesday.

The rain last night was "too much water" for the temperance folks of the city. The attendance at the Academy was small.

A three cornered double-pointed side-geared shoulder-hitting matinee was given at Charley Diehm's ranch Thursday night.

What with a headless rooster, a reformed clown and a female base ball game in prospect, Fort Wayne is a metropolitan city.

Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud? or words to that effect, when we roll in the luxury of a headless rooster and a female base ball match all in one week.

The Gazette of yesterday hauls the constables over the coals, but unjustly implicates all of them. They say they would like to hear more parparticulars about the matters in controversy.

Daisy de Younge has filed, with the committee on police and prisons, written charges against Policeman George Humbrecht, which will be investigated immediately after the libel suit between the same parties, which is set for next Tuesday, before Justice Zollinger.

If you want a situation, or to employ help, or have anything to rent or sell or lease, or have found or lost anything, advertise in the half-cent column of the SENTINEL. It is very cheap, and will be read by more people than if printed in all the other daily papers in the city.

Yesterday afternoon about half past 3, as Mrs. Remus, residing on Miner street, was visiting her mother, Mrs. Beach on Broadway, some person entered her residence and went through the bureau, taking a revolver, numerous small articles and $23 in cash. There is no clue to the thieves.

Senator Sarnighausen is quite ill.

Wilson Hoagland has returned home.

Isse Monheimer, of Cincinnati, is in the city.

Col. A. J. Casse, of Watertown, N. Y., is in town.

The female base ball clubs will arrive on Monday.

E. F. Baldwin returned last night to his home in Peoria, Ill.

Hon. John B. Stoll, of the Ligonier Banner, was in the city to-day.

Fred Boltz has returned from Hillsdale. He bears his honors meekly.

A large number of commercial travelers will winter at the Aveline tomorrow.

Judge Taylor has gone to Saratoga as a delegate to the National Bar Association.

Sam Laib, of Chicago, is in the city revelling in the luxury of a genuine Hoosier ague shake.

There is no truth in the report that the horses, Capt. Crapo and Jessie Dixon are to be sold.

Marshall Diehl left for Illinois last night. He expects to return with the Morgan & Beach burglars.

Charley McCulloch and Charley Brackenridge will take in the Alert excursion to Niagara Falls.

Al. Friend leaves for Chicago tonight accompanied by A. C. Greenebaum, who is going to visit his child.

J. D. Cook was the original surveyor of the Muncie Railroad line, which he helped to lay out twenty-five years ago.

The driving at the park last evening was a very enjoyable affair. Nothing transpired to mar the pleasure of the occasion.

J. D. Cook left this morning for Toledo. He will return Monday, when an advertisement for iron for the water works will be prepared and published.

The funeral of A. Frossard, of New Haven, took place to-day under the auspices of the French Benevolent Society. Two large 'bus loads from this city were in attendance.

Mr. Cabell, of Lafayette, is in the city in consultation with the officers of the Terre Haute Narrow Gauge Railroad, for the purpose of negotiating for the purchase of the right of way for the above road. An understanding will probably be arrived at to-day.

The funeral of the late Mrs. John Filcer took place from the cathedral this morning and was largely attended. The floral tributes were excedingly handsome. The remains were followed to their last resting place in Lindenwood Cemetery by a very long procession.

While the workmen at the temple last evening were engaged in hoisting a large stone from a wagon, the wire cable supporting the derrick gave way and the derrick fell over. No one was injured, although one man narrowly escaped being entangled in the cable as it fell.

A Chicago Times special from Litchfield, Ill., reports the arrest at that place of four young men giving their names as Henry Smith, Frank Hibber, James Wilson and George Kinter, on whose persons were found several new knives and revolvers, supposed to be stolen. They said they came from Fort Wayne. Perhaps they are the persons who burglarized Morgan & Beach's store.

Wm. S. Moore, advance agent of the Female Athletic Association of Philadelphia and New York, is in the city. The "Female Athletic Association" consists of two female base ball nines, who play at Swinney Park next Tuesday afternoon. These are the same nines which played at Baltimore a few weeks ago, an account of which game was published in the SENTINEL at the time.

THE RAILROADS.

Freigh on the Wabash is increasing again.

Everything is quiet on the Grand Rapids road.

The Pittsburgh road is being ballested with stone as fast as the supply will permit.

The Pittsburgh is putting up a fine new depot at Delphos, O., which is almost completed.

A hatless individual got off No. 1 on the Pittsburgh and struck a bee line for a hat store.

Emigrant travel over the Pittsburgh is not quite so heavy as during the earlier part of the summer.

Conductor Jean Sullivan, of the Pittsburgh, is running the "Musical Caboose" (No. 4,265) during the sickness of Conductor Prendiville.

A Solitary Drunk.

"Benjamin arise" said the mayor, and Deputy Ben arose. "Hold up your hand, and you solemnly swear, and call Thomas Shaughnessy."

Thomas was charged with having boon found unlawfully and awfully drunk, and to add additional injury it was at 6 o'clock in the morning.

This state of things couldn't be allowed and the mayor suggested that he donate $3 to the city and depart in peace.

A grand excursion from Fort Wayne to Toledo will take place next Sunday under the auspices of the Harmonia Singing Society. Fare for the round trip only $2. Tickets for the round trip good for return until August 21st, $2.75. Don't fail to go and attend the great Sangerfest.

World's Dispensary Medical Ass'n,

BUFFALO AND LONDON.

Incorporated January, 1876.
Capital Stock, $1,000,00.

(Successors to R. V. PIERCE, M. D.)

DR. R. V. PIERCE, having acquired a world-wide reputation in the treatment of Chronic Diseases, resulting in a professional business far exceeding his individual ability to conduct, some years ago induced several medical gentlemen to associate themselves with with him, as the Faculty of the World's Dispensary, the Consulting Department of which has since been merged with the INVALIDS' HOTEL. The organization has been completed and incorporated under the name and style of World's Dispensary Medical Association, with the following officers: Hon. R. V. PIERCE, President; F. D. PIERCE, V. President; JOHN E. PIERCE, Secretary; LESTER B. SMITH, Treasurer.

NINE PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS of eminence and skill have been chosen as the Faculty.

CHRONIC DISEASES of all forms come within the province of our several specialties.

LUNG DISEASES—This division of practice is very ably managed by a gentleman of mature judgment and skill. Bronchial, Throat and Lung Diseases treated with the most successful reiults.

DISEASES OF WOMEN.—Especially are our facilities of a superior order for the cure of all those chronic diseases peculiar to females.

NERVOUS DISEASES—Paralysis, Nervous Debility, Epilepsy (Fits), Chore (St. Vitus's Dance), Neuralgip, and other nervous affections, receive the attention of an expert in this specialty.

NOT NECESSARY TO SEE PATIENTS.—By our original system of diagnosis, we can treat many chronic diseases as success fully without as with a personal consultation. For particulars see "People's Common Sense Medical Adviser" (1,000 pages, sent post-paid for $1.50) or "Invalids' and Tourists' Guide Book" (100 pagef, 10 cents post-paid).

SURGICAL CASES.—Among the operations which we are called upon most frequently to perform, are those for Nasal Polypus, Harelip, Tumors, Fistula in Ano, Piles, Hernia (Rdpture), Hydrocele (Dropsy of the Scrotum), Varicocele, Ovarian and Uterine Tumors, Calculi (Stone in the Bladder), Stricture, etc., etc. We also treat successfully, by a new method without surgical operation, Cancers, Club-feet, Spinal Curvature, and other deformities. (See pamphlet entitled, "Motion as a Curative Agent," sent on receipt of 10 cents.)

Address,
World's Dispensary Medical Ass'n,
BUFFALO, N. Y.

Woman.

By an immense practice at the World's Dispensary and Invalids' Hotel, having treated many thousand cases of those diseases peculiar to woman, I have been enabled to perfect a most petent and positive remedy for these diseases.

To designate this natural specific, I have named it

Dr. Price's Favorite Prescription

The term, however, is but a feeble expression of my high appreciation of its value, based upon personal observation. I have, while witnessing its positive results in the special diseases incident to the organism of woman, singled it out as the Climax or Crowning Gem of my medical career. On its merits, as a positive, safe and effectual remedy for this class of diseases, and one that will, at all times and all circumstances, act kindly, I am willing to stake my reputation as a physician, and so confident am I that it will not disappoint the most sanguine expectations of a single invalid lady who uses it for any of of the ailments for which I recommend it, that I offer and sell it under A POSITIVE GUARANTEE. (For conditions, see pamphlet wrapping bottle.)

The following are among those diseases in which my Favorite Prescription has worked cures, as if by magic, and with a certainty never before attained by any medicine: Leucorrhœa, Excessive Flowing, Painful Monthly Periods, Suppressions when from unnatural causes, Irregularities, Weak Back, Prolapsus, or falling of the Uterus, Anteversion and Retroversion, Bearing-down Sensations, Internal Heat, Nervous Depression, Debility, Despondency, Threatened Miscarriage, Chronic Congestion, Inflammation and Ulceration of the Uterus, Impotency, Barrenness, or Sterility, and Female Weakness. I do not extol this medicine as a "cure-all," but it admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most perfect specific in all chronic diseases of the sexual system of women. It will not disappoint, nor will it do harm, in any state or condition.

Those who desire further information on these subjects can obtain it in THE PEOPLE'S COMMON SENSE MEDICAL ADVISER, a book of over 900 pages, sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1.50. It treats minutely of those diseases peculiar to Females, and gives much valuable advice in regard to the management of those affections.

THE "RIGHT START"

Made by the Council on the Water Works Question.

Passage of the Ordinance as Reported by the Committee.

An Amendment Fastening Steam Power on Defeated 12 to 5.

The council met last evening pursuant to adjournment on Tuesday night. His honor the mayor presided. All the councilmen were present, except Mr. Ryan.

The mayor announced the object of the meeting as being to hear the report of the committee upon what is known as the waterworks ordinance.

The following report was then read:

That the first section be left unchanged; that the second be amended in effect that the supply be taken from wells, Spy Run, St. Joe River, or both, as auxiliaries, as the case may require; also that the pumping works be located on the City Park.

Section 3 was amended to provide for the location of the reservoir in the seventh ward.

Sections 4 and 5 were stricken out.

The report was concurred in, the ayes and noes being as follows:

Ayes—Chittenden, Dryer, Fox, Hettler, Holmes, Lillie, McCulloch, McKean, Mohr, Muhler, Reese, Vordermark and Wilkinson.

Nays—Bash, Hamilton, Welch and Reidmiller.

On motion the rules were suspended and the resolutions on water works were read and discussed.

Mr. Vordermark offered a resolution that the report of J. D. Cook of July 8th be spread on the records of the council; unanimously adopted.

The ordinance providing for the erection of water works was then read for the third time as amended by the special committee appointed on last Tuesday night.

Mr. Vordermark moved to pass the ordinance.

Mr. Mohr offered the following amendment to take the place of all the sections after the preamble of the ordinance:

Resolved, that water works be constructed in this city.

Mr. Mohr moved for its adoption and was seconded by Mr. Hamilton.

Mr. Vordermark moved to amend by tabling the amendment.

Mr. Hettler said he didn't understand the meaning of the resolution as he supposed that it was generally understood that waterworks were to be built.

Mr. Vordermark raised a point of order that the amendment of Mr. Mohr was a new ordinance and would have to pass three readings.

The point was decided not well taken, when Hettler seconded Vordermark's motion to table Mohr's amendment, which was carried by a vote of 13 to 4, the following being the ayes and nays:

Ayes—Bash, Chittenden, Dreyer, Fox, Hettler, Holmes, Lillie, McCulloch, McKean, Muhler, Reese, Reidmiller, and Vordermark.

Nays—Hamilton, Mohr, Welch and Wilkinson.

Mr. Bash then offered an amendment that the power used shall be two steam engines, which was amended by a motion to lay on the table, which motion prevailed by a vote of 12 to 5, the following being the ayes and noes:

Ayes—Chittenden, Dreyer, Fox, Hamilton, Lillie, McCulloch, McKean, Mohr, Muhler, Reidmiller, Vordermark and Wilkison.

Nays—Bash, Hettler, Holmes, Reese and Welch.

The original ordinance as amended by the committee was then put before the council and passed by a vote of 13 to 3.

Ayes—Chittenden, Dreyer, Fox, Hamilton, Hettler, Holmes, Lillie, McCulloch, McKean, Muhler, Reese, Reidmiller, Vordermark and Wilkinson.

Nays—Bash, Mohr and Welch.

Councilman Chittenden offered a resolution establishing the board of trustees.

Mr. Hettler said that the resolution was superfluous, and wanted it referred to the city attorney. He being present gave it as his opinion that the resolution would possibly do no good but would certainly do no harm.

Then Hettler wanted the resolution referred to the trustees, whereupon Chittenden walked up to the clerk's desk and withdrew his resolution and was called to order by Hettler, who said he had no right to withdraw a resolution after it was put before the council.

The mayor sustained the point of order and Chittenden replaced the resolution.

The trustees, through their president, stated that they could see no harm in the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was then put and adopted.

The bonds of the trustees were then offered in sum of $20,000 each, as follows:

Chas. McCulloch, with S. B. Bond and Wm. Fleming as surety.

Henry Monning, with A. C. Trentman and Geo. Link as surety.

C. Boseker, with F. B. Vogel and H. C. Graffe, as surety.

Mr. Muhler moved to refer the bonds to the city attorney, and they were so referred. The rules were then suspended to receive the report of the city attorney, who reported that the bonds were regular, in due form and sufficient. Which report was concurred in and the bonds were unanimously approved.

Mr. Hettler then offered a resolution that the trustees be authorized to advertise for bids for 3,200 tons of pipes, 65 tons of special castings and 200 fire hydrants. Adopted.

A resolution to direct the city clerk to issue an order for $80 in favor of the Alert Hook and Ladder Company, was adopted.

The bill of the Staats Zeitung of $75 for printing the engineer's report was allowed. After which the ordinance for restraining the running of dogs at large in this city was read for the third time and referred to the city attorney and Mr. Bash.

Resolutions were then offered to instruct the proper committees to advertise for lumber and for bids for the city printing and advertising next year. Adopted.

Adjourned.

A Mrs. Hiller now living nine miles northeast of this city, is suffering from an ulcer on her leg. The leg was bound so tightly as to stop the circulation, and it is now feared that amputation is necessary.

Councilman Bash last evening denied that he said on Tuesday night that Mr. Cook dictated every word of the water works ordinance as introduced. Mr. Bash undoubtedly did say that very thing, but perhaps he did not intend to do so, and did not weigh his words carefully. At any rate, he is entitled to the benefit of the doubt, as he is a gentleman of veracity and would hardly mislead the council purposely.

OFF WITH HIS HEAD.

A Lively Decapitated Fowl in the City.

History of an Interesting Curiosity.

A curiosity in the shape of a headless rooster is now on exhibition in this city. The fowl in its better days, before it embarked in the show business, was the property of an old farmer living near Joplin, Mo. On the 21st of last March, he caught the said rooster, and with his little hatchet, chopped his head completely off, intending to dine off of his fowlship. Upon the loss of his head, his f. s. took exceptions to further proceedings, and hid himself under the barn, where he was supposed to have died. Imagine the astonishment of the farmer the next day to see the rooster walking around the barn yard evidently in search of his missing head. He was captured and cared for, and soon recovered from his loss, and to-day is happy and well. He was purchased by a pair of young men from Bloomington, Ill., who are now exhibiting him. The head was cut off at the place where the head and neck would be supposed to meet. He is fed through a small tube which is inserted into his crop, and is, without doubt, a great living curiosity.

AMUSEMENTS.

FEMALE BASE BALL MATCH.

A decided novelty in the way of athletic sport will be furnished our citizens next Tuesday afternoon at Swinney Park, when the two female base ball nines, which have produced such a big sensation all over the east, will play a match game. The admission will be twenty-five cents. The curiosity and novelty of the exhibition will doubtless draw an immense crowd.

LANDS! LANDS!

KANSAS TO THE FRONT!

The Leading Wheat State in the Union in 1878, and the Fourth Corn State—The Great Kansas Harvest in 1878 was Solid for the "Golden Belt."

The celebrated Grain Belt to country, in the limestone section of Central Kansas, traversed by the Kansas Pacific.

The following statement are taken from the report of the Kansas state board of agriculture for 1878:

WHEAT! Kansas rises from the Eleventh Wheat State in 1877 to the First Wheat State in the Union in 1878, producing 26,518,958 bushels winter wheat, and 5,796,403 bushels spring wheat; total,

Bushels Wheat, with only one-eighth of the state under cultivation. The organized counties lying in the Golden Wheat Belt of the Kansas Pacific produced 13,335,324 bushels, or over 41 percent, and, including unreporting counties, fully 14,000,000 bushels, or 45 percent of the entire yield of wheat in the state, averaging 24 bushels to the acre, while the average for the state was 17 bushels per acre.

CORN! Kansas, the Fourth Corn State in the Union, in 1878, produced 89,324,971 bushels of Corn. Of which the Golden Grain Belt counties produced 27,399,055 bushels, or 31 percent, nearly one-third of the entire yield of the state, with an equally grand showing in all other departments of agriculture.

The foregoing facts show conclusively why

29 percent of the increase in population in the state during the past four years; and 40 percent of the increase in the population during the past year; and 43 percent of the increased acreage of wheat in the state in 1878, belonged to the "Golden Belt."

A Farm for Everybody.—05,000,000 farms 5,000,000 acres for sale by the Kansas Pacific—the best land in America, at from $2 to $6 per acre, one-quarter off for cash, or on 6 or 11 years credit at 7 percent interest. It don't take much money to buy a farm on the Kansas Pacific; $26 to $80 will secure 80 acres on credit, or $120 to $360 in cash will buy it outright.

TUTT'S PILLS!

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS THEY ARE WORTH THEIR WEIGHT in GOLD READ WHAT HE SAYS:

DR. TUTT:—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last Spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.
REV. R. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

A TORPID LIVER

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and will with certainty relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, while under the influence of these pills, of itself indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice, but if it has become habitual, one pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the frequency of the dose until a regular daily movement is obtained, which will soon follow.

THE "RIGHT START"

Made by the Council on the Water Works Question.

Passage of the Ordinance as Reported by the Committee.

An Amendment Fastening Steam Power on Defeated 12 to 5.

The council met last evening pursuant to adjournment on Tuesday night. His honor the mayor presided. All the councilmen were present, except Mr. Ryan.

The mayor announced the object of the meeting as being to hear the report of the committee upon what is known as the waterworks ordinance.

The following report was then read:

That the first section be left unchanged; that the second be amended in effect that the supply be taken from wells, Spy Run, St. Joe River, or both, as auxiliaries, as the case may require; also that the pumping works be located on the City Park.

Section 3 was amended to provide for the location of the reservoir in the seventh ward.

Sections 4 and 5 were stricken out.

The report was concurred in, the ayes and noes being as follows:

Ayes—Chittenden, Dryer, Fox, Hettler, Holmes, Lillie, McCulloch, McKean, Mohr, Muhler, Reese, Vordermark and Wilkinson.

Nays—Bash, Hamilton, Welch and Reidmiller.

On motion the rules were suspended and the resolutions on water works were read and discussed.

Mr. Vordermark offered a resolution that the report of J. D. Cook of July 8th be spread on the records of the council; unanimously adopted.

The ordinance providing for the erection of water works was then read for the third time as amended by the special committee appointed on last Tuesday night.

Mr. Vordermark moved to pass the ordinance.

Mr. Mohr offered the following amendment to take the place of all the sections after the preamble of the ordinance:

Resolved, that water works be constructed in this city.

Mr. Mohr moved for its adoption and was seconded by Mr. Hamilton.

Mr. Vordermark moved to amend by tabling the amendment.

Mr. Hettler said he didn't understand the meaning of the resolution as he supposed that it was generally understood that waterworks were to be built.

Mr. Vordermark raised a point of order that the amendment of Mr. Mohr was a new ordinance and would have to pass three readings.

The point was decided not well taken, when Hettler seconded Vordermark's motion to table Mohr's amendment, which was carried by a vote of 13 to 4, the following being the ayes and nays:

Ayes—Bash, Chittenden, Dreyer, Fox, Hettler, Holmes, Lillie, McCulloch, McKean, Muhler, Reese, Reidmiller, and Vordermark.

Nays—Hamilton, Mohr, Welch and Wilkinson.

Mr. Bash then offered an amendment that the power used shall be two steam engines, which was amended by a motion to lay on the table, which motion prevailed by a vote of 12 to 5, the following being the ayes and noes:

Ayes—Chittenden, Dreyer, Fox, Hamilton, Lillie, McCulloch, McKean, Mohr, Muhler, Reidmiller, Vordermark and Wilkison.

Nays—Bash, Hettler, Holmes, Reese and Welch.

The original ordinance as amended by the committee was then put before the council and passed by a vote of 13 to 3.

Ayes—Chittenden, Dreyer, Fox, Hamilton, Hettler, Holmes, Lillie, McCulloch, McKean, Muhler, Reese, Reidmiller, Vordermark and Wilkinson.

Nays—Bash, Mohr and Welch.

Councilman Chittenden offered a resolution establishing the board of trustees.

Mr. Hettler said that the resolution was superfluous, and wanted it referred to the city attorney. He being present gave it as his opinion that the resolution would possibly do no good but would certainly do no harm.

Then Hettler wanted the resolution referred to the trustees, whereupon Chittenden walked up to the clerk's desk and withdrew his resolution and was called to order by Hettler, who said he had no right to withdraw a resolution after it was put before the council.

The mayor sustained the point of order and Chittenden replaced the resolution.

The trustees, through their president, stated that they could see no harm in the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was then put and adopted.

The bonds of the trustees were then offered in sum of $20,000 each, as follows:

Chas. McCulloch, with S. B. Bond and Wm. Fleming as surety.

Henry Monning, with A. C. Trentman and Geo. Link as surety.

C. Boseker, with F. B. Vogel and H. C. Graffe, as surety.

Mr. Muhler moved to refer the bonds to the city attorney, and they were so referred. The rules were then suspended to receive the report of the city attorney, who reported that the bonds were regular, in due form and sufficient. Which report was concurred in and the bonds were unanimously approved.

Mr. Hettler then offered a resolution that the trustees be authorized to advertise for bids for 3,200 tons of pipes, 65 tons of special castings and 200 fire hydrants. Adopted.

A resolution to direct the city clerk to issue an order for $80 in favor of the Alert Hook and Ladder Company, was adopted.

The bill of the Staats Zeitung of $75 for printing the engineer's report was allowed. After which the ordinance for restraining the running of dogs at large in this city was read for the third time and referred to the city attorney and Mr. Bash.

Resolutions were then offered to instruct the proper committees to advertise for lumber and for bids for the city printing and advertising next year. Adopted.

Adjourned.

A Mrs. Hiller now living nine miles northeast of this city, is suffering from an ulcer on her leg. The leg was bound so tightly as to stop the circulation, and it is now feared that amputation is necessary.

Councilman Bash last evening denied that he said on Tuesday night that Mr. Cook dictated every word of the water works ordinance as introduced. Mr. Bash undoubtedly did say that very thing, but perhaps he did not intend to do so, and did not weigh his words carefully. At any rate, he is entitled to the benefit of the doubt, as he is a gentleman of veracity and would hardly mislead the council purposely.

OFF WITH HIS HEAD.

A Lively Decapitated Fowl in the City.

History of an Interesting Curiosity.

A curiosity in the shape of a headless rooster is now on exhibition in this city. The fowl in its better days, before it embarked in the show business, was the property of an old farmer living near Joplin, Mo. On the 21st of last March, he caught the said rooster, and with his little hatchet, chopped his head completely off, intending to dine off of his fowlship. Upon the loss of his head, his f. s. took exceptions to further proceedings, and hid himself under the barn, where he was supposed to have died. Imagine the astonishment of the farmer the next day to see the rooster walking around the barn yard evidently in search of his missing head. He was captured and cared for, and soon recovered from his loss, and today is happy and well. He was purchased by a pair of young men from Bloomington, Ill., who are now exhibiting him. The head was cut off at the place where the head and neck would be supposed to meet. He is fed through a small tube which is inserted into his crop, and is, without doubt, a great living curiosity.

AMUSEMENTS.

FEMALE BASE BALL MATCH.

A decided novelty in the way of athletic sport will be furnished our citizens next Tuesday afternoon at Swinney Park, when the two female base ball nines, which have produced such a big sensation all over the east, will play a match game. The admission will be twenty-five cents. The curiosity and novelty of the exhibition will doubtless draw an immense crowd.

Bushels Wheat, with only one-eighth of the state under cultivation. The organized counties lying in the Golden Wheat Belt of the Kansas Pacific produced 13,335,324 bushels, or over 41 percent, and, including unreporting counties, fully 14,000,000 bushels, or 45 percent of the entire yield of wheat in the state, averaging 24 bushels to the acre, while the average for the state was 17 bushels per acre.

CORN! Kansas, the Fourth Corn State in the Union, in 1878, produced 89,324,971 bushels of Corn. Of which the Golden Grain Belt counties produced 27,399,055 bushels, or 31 percent, nearly one-third of the entire yield of the state, with an equally great showing in all other departments of agriculture.

The foregoing facts show conclusively why

29 percent of the increase in population in the state during the past four years; and 40 percent of the increase in the population during the past year; and 43 percent of the increased acreage of wheat in the state in 1878, belonged to the "Golden Belt."

TUTT'S PILLS!

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS
THEY ARE WORTH THEIR WEIGHT in GOLD
READ WHAT HE SAYS:

DR. TUTT:—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last Spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.
REV. R. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and will with certainty relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, while under the influence of these pills, of itself indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice, but if it has become habitual, one pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the frequency of the dose until a regular daily movement is obtained, which will soon follow.
